Steel Ring Guards Olympic Flame

MEXICO CITY (CP) — The 1968 Olympic Games opened Saturday in a spirit of peace and brotherhood, although 6,000 Mexican marines, soldiers and police stood shoulder to shoulder outside the Olympic Stadium to guard against any repetition of recent student riots here. (See stories, picture, Page 14.)

President GUSTAVO DIAZ ORDAZ officially opened the Games, first ever held in Latin America, at 12:33 p.m. Mexico City time.

A record 108 countries participated in the traditional opening march past of athletes before a capacity crowd of 80,000. In accordance with tradition, Greece, homeland of the Olympics, was first and host country Mexico brought up the rear.

North Korea stayed out because the International Olympic Committee would not allow it to call itself the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

More than 7,400 athletes stood in the stadium infield as 6,200 pigeons and 40,000 balloons soared into the bright, sunny sky. The temperature was 70 degrees.

Competition begins today in several sports, including track, boxing and rowing, and the Games end Sunday, Oct. 27.

Swimming, in which Canada is expected to make its strongest showing, starts Thursday, Oct. 17.

Enriqueta Basilio, a member of the Mexican track team, became the first woman to light the Olympic flame, which burns atop the stadium for the duration of the Games.

Wearing a white track suit and holding in her right hand a torch lit on Mount Olympus in Greece, she ran into the stadium, around the synthetic, 400-metre track and up 50 steps to the urn.

The only track final today will be the 10,000 metres, in which outstanding runners from every continent are expected to provide one of the closest races of the Games. Heats are scheduled in all seven rowing events.

Apollo Plays Tag 'Yaba Daba Doo!'

HOUSTON (AP) — Plagued by a cold, command pilot Walter M. Schirra Jr. gunned his Apollo 7 spaceship in pursuit of a wildly tumbling target in space Saturday, then played tag with it in a make-believe rescue of two astronauts lost in moon orbit.

"It's tumbling rather wildly so we want to stay away from it," the astronaut reported about the sport second stage of the Saturn rocket they had chased across the skies high over the Pacific. (See also Page 11.)

'RIDE AND HALF'

Fighting a tight time schedule, Schirra, who had imposed a television blackout on the ship, concentrated on firing the spacecraft's big rocket engine packing more power than a jet fighter.

"Yaba daba doo!" Schirra exclaimed when he first fired the rocket. "That was a ride and a half."

After the manoeuvre was completed, Schirra broke away from the rocket for the last time. He also told the ground controllers that he would use the ship's portable television camera to give America a look at the astronauts in space sometime Monday morning.

The Apollo 7 inched as close as 70 feet of the tumbling rocket and jammed on the rocket brakes to avoid getting too close. Then it hovered there for nearly half an hour.

With astronauts Donn F. Eisele and Walter Cunningham at his side, Schirra took more than three hours to close the 10-mile gap between Apollo 7 and the rocket, working out his own flight path by computer, sextant and telescope.

SPACE PICKUP
It is the basic manoeuvre a moon pilot would have to use if the space cab taking two astronauts to the moon's surface were disabled and stranded in lunar orbit. Should that happen, the lone pilot in the mothership would have to swoop down on the space cab to rescue his fellow fliers.

The astronauts reported a progressive dirty window problem. "The centre hatch window

Dublin Police Duck Bombs

DUBLIN (UPI) — Demonstrators protesting alleged Protestant repression of Roman Catholics in Northern Ireland attacked police with gasoline bombs and sticks in front of the British Embassy Saturday.

Then they marched away in ranks, throwing sticks and smashing the windows of several government buildings and the Shelbourne Hotel, site of a clash between police and demonstrators earlier this year.

At least three policemen were reported injured and about 10 youths reported arrested.

An estimated 300 civil rights marchers gathered in downtown Dublin Saturday evening to protest against the stiff suppression by Northern Ireland police last Saturday of a civil rights march by Roman Catholics in Londonderry.

A similar march tentatively planned for this Saturday in Northern Ireland was called off. Then the Dublin demonstrators marched about half a mile to the British Embassy where they encountered a force of 50 policemen.

Leaders Try 'Leapfrog'

From AP, UPI

GIBRALTAR — Two government leaders "leapfrogged" on a Sunday morning aboard a British warship sounds little like the solution to an international confrontation.

However, the term leapfrog was the key word as Prime Minister Wilson of Britain and Rhodesia's Prime Minister Ian Smith discussed prospects for the future of talks on the Rhodesian independence crisis.

encouragement appeared. Spokesmen continued to describe the talks as tough going. But the term "constructive discussions" was used for the first time.

The vital point, from which all other difficulties flowed, was still understood to be the British demand for unimped progress toward majority rule for Rhodesia's 4,000,000 black Africans, now governed by 220,000 whites. Smith, in an interview, said "we are continually trying to impress on these people (the British) the fact that we are dealing with problems affect-

DURBAN (UPI) — South African Premier John Vorster said Saturday if a solution to the Rhodesian problem can be achieved "it is necessary in the interests of the whole of southern Africa that it should be found."

Speaking at Ladysmith, Natal, Vorster said "I am convinced that if the Rhodesian question cannot now be solved, it is because it cannot be solved."

Vorster added, however, that the South African government would never try to prescribe what a solution should be although South Africa had more than normal interest in the outcome.

He said sanctions and boycotts had never solved any problems and added that a solution of the Rhodesian problem would benefit the whole of southern Africa, including Zambia.

Regarding the missile range for military and scientific purposes which is to be built along the Natal coast as announced earlier this week, Vorster said the choice of the site was dictated by the fact that future threats to South Africa would come from the east.

Batteries, Boats Fly to Biafra

Colonist London Sunday Times Service

WEST BERLIN — Four and a half tons of rubber boats, several tons of thick copper tubing, 300 compasses and 5,000 electric batteries were among "relief supplies" flown to Biafra last week.

The stores, the first load of a private airlift, were sent on a DC-4 chartered in Rome by Caritas, the Roman Catholic organization, to fly supplies to Gabon for Biafra.

The charterers were approached by the West Berlin "Society for the Activation of Art and Science," who asked to use any spare freight space.

The head of the organization, a 40-year-old German, Gentes Meissner, then flew to meet the charterers at Frankfurt.

Eventually the plane was loaded up in Frankfurt with the rubber boats, copper tubing, batteries and other stores and took off to fly to West Africa via Paris, with Meissner on board.

Its basic cargo, for the German and French branches of Caritas, consisted of two tons of fish and milk powder and two tons of medicines. But some of this had to be off-loaded in Paris to make room for more stores for the West Berlin organization, including "four tons of dried fish."

Eye witnesses say boxes of undischarged content as well as cases described as medicine for the Order of The Knights of Malta were put aboard. Normally a charter aircraft for Gabon must apply for landing rights at least 48 hours ahead. But a telephone call to Paris by Meissner produced instant clearance.

At Libreville, French aircraft — military planes, according to one report; "French Red Cross aircraft," according to West Berlin organizers — ferried the supplies into the Biafran bush.

The West Berlin organization, which appears to draw on considerable funds "from private donors," operates from Meissner's apartment in the British sector.

In the Second World War

Meissner was a paratrooper. Now he is an actor.

Meissner ("today I am, for non-violence") returned from Biafra this week.

"Everything we take to Biafra is of course aid," he said. "If boats are used by Biafran soldiers to cross rivers that's all right with me."

The compasses, according to Meissner are for missionaries and the tubing for hospital water pipes. He says the half ton of batteries are for electric torches. But West German newspapers reported recently that the Biafran army has developed a "rocket launcher" from piping and fired by batteries.

Meissner is a personal friend of Col. C. Oduagwu Ojukwu, the Biafran leader. He and his secretary, a theology student have raised $30,000 to cover the cost of the first airlift.

Ovation for Tory

Retreat Days Over—Heath

BLACKPOOL (AP) — Conservative leader Edward Heath firmly asserted his authority over Britain's opposition party Saturday and rejected doctrines of extremism.

He appealed to the British people to follow the Tory lead in making their nation once again great, after what he called four years of a "discredited Socialist government."

Heath told his party's annual convention:

"The voice of Britain is quivering and faint. We used to be known for our forthrightness and good sense. We used to have a reputation for keeping our word."

OUR FRIENDS

"Our friends across the world are asking if those days are gone for good. Let us proclaim to them clearly and unhesitatingly: The years of retreat are over."

His speech was the final act of the four-day convention. It was pitched in terms of a bid for power at national elections which must be held by 1971.

BROKEN WORD

The 4,500 delegates obviously loved their leader's fighting words and harsh attacks on Prime Minister Wilson—"that manipulator of the broken word"—and at the end they gave Heath a seven-minute ovation which party officials said equalled anything accorded in the past to the late Sir Winston Churchill and other party greats.

Heath warned that the party's final decision on Conservative doctrine in his. Then, point by point, he rejected more extreme policies called for by right-wing leader Enoch Powell in speeches across the nation, the last in Morecambe, 25 miles north of here, Friday night.

POWELL'S CALL

Heath rejected Powell's call for "assisted repatriation" of colored immigrants which Powell made in the convention hall Thursday. Powell did not make clear whether he meant voluntary or compulsory action, but Heath said:

"If there are any who believe that immigrants to this country, most of whom have already become British citizens, could be forcibly deported because they are colored people in an attempt to solve this problem, then that I must repudiate, absolutely and completely."

NO INFLUENCE?

Heath expressed grave doubt that voluntary repatriation would have any influence on the situation.

Heath promised to reverse the Labor government's policy of military withdrawal from east of Suez, reaffirmed the party's will to continue seeking entry into the European Common Market and called for strengthening of Britain's armed forces and the Western alliance.

School Reform Solid Winner

PARIS (UPI) — French Education Minister Edgar Faure, fresh from an unprecedented victory for his reform of the nation's Napoleonic education system, Saturday emerged as one of the most likely successors of President de Gaulle.

Faure's controversial reform of higher education was passed Friday in the National Assembly by a staggering 411 to 6 with 30 abstentions — mostly communist.

The vote boosted Faure as a new rallying force for a broad centre section of France's splintered political spectrum.

MAIN OPPOSITION

Even the Communists did not criticize the education minister's plan for reforming French universities. They said they abstained because of amendments which they felt watered down his original plan.

The biggest and bitterest opposition in the debate of the reforms came from within the Gaullist ranks, but he succeeded, de Gaulle, in rallying the party when it finally came to a vote.

Many political observers felt the overwhelming vote was not so much for Faure's program as to the way he presented it. Faure made it clear from the beginning that he was not asking for rubberstamp approval, but for real legislative action.

MAJOR FEATURES

The result was that the bill was gone over bit by bit, modified here, amplified there, but still left with the most important features of Faure's outline: decentralized autonomy for the nation's universities, student participation in university decision-making and the right of student political activity within the universities.

If the 60-year-old education minister succeeds in putting the legislation into action as smoothly as he put it through the Assembly, he could find himself in line to succeed de Gaulle — or, at least, to become France's next premier.

Gold or Paper?

THE OUTCOME of the International Monetary Fund meeting in which the group led by the United States failed to reach an agreement with South Africa has not been regarded as having done much to stabilize the monetary system.

The South African attitude that it should receive a guarantee that the central banks would buy all newly-mined South African gold at the basis price of $35 an ounce and still allow it to sell gold in the open market at premium prices was not acceptable to IMF.

The U.S. criticism was that South Africa, as the world's largest producer of gold, was wanting the best of two worlds, juggling its deliveries to market demands, and then expecting IMF to maintain its guaranteed minimum price whenever South Africa had spare gold to offer.

Canada, Britain and other countries supporting the United States hope that the new "paper gold" recently created through approval of Special Drawing Rights, will eventually be accepted as a valid vehicle for the transmission of capital from one country to another.

South Africa, quite naturally, opposes any move that will reduce the importance of gold as the basic requirement for world trade, and it has supporters in many quarters and particularly among the Swiss banks.

However, the forces of opinion are against them and the U.S. insistence that the IMF will not be used to guarantee a $35 basement on the price of gold as a prop for gold speculators is not likely to be altered.

Indeed there is wide acceptance of the views of U.S. Secretary Fowler who says the pegged price of $35 an ounce for gold is the backbone of the monetary system and that a change — up or down — would be a destabilizing factor.

The secretary adds the U.S. administration believes that neither gold, nor gold markets, nor gold speculators should be permitted to unsettle and interfere with international economic stability.

But the United States admits that paper gold and its success will depend on the national users of these instruments. The SRDs will not be acceptable from those countries which fail to deal satisfactorily with their payment problems.

It is in dealing with the delinquent nations that the backers of gold have their most convincing argument against paper gold.

Two Choices

IT IS NOT WISEFUL THINKING to suggest that the Soviet Union's brutal suppression of Czechoslovakian liberalism and its determination to remain in military occupation of the country has seriously damaged the cause of communism. It is reasonable to suppose that among those nations which still have a choice any trend towards acceptance of Lenin's doctrines will be slowed, if not halted.

The Economist in London makes the point that there are only two basic systems in which the nations organize their political and economic lives. One is the Russian way, adopted by 14 governments around the world, which puts all important decisions in all fields into the hands of a single, centralized and highly disciplined party. The other is the pluralist system of the west.

"What the invasion of Czechoslovakia has done is to remind people that this is the really fundamental division of today's world," the paper says. "It has destroyed General de Gaulle's argument that the difference between Communists and non-Communists in Europe is less important than the difference between Europeans and Americans."

"The central issue of the next 20 years is not a matter of what continent you come from or what color your skin is; it is which of the two rival systems of ideas most people are going to be living under a generation from now."

The Economist draws no particular conclusion on the basis of these observations. That, presumably, is left for the reader to ponder.

But if communism means the subjugation of the will of a people, by the Soviet Union in East Europe or by China in its sphere of Asian influence, the same choice would be for pluralism which is the trademark of democracy.

Only the fear of some other sort of domination would be likely to drive a people into the Communist camp for protection. And for this reason the Western world must be alert to the necessity of reassuring the vulnerable nations.

Plugging the Leak

A BRITISH COLUMBIA COMPANY which recently changed from private to public status and sold shares to the public brought out the interesting information in its prospectus that its pension plan had only one beneficiary — the chief shareholder of the company.

As a considerable sum of over $100,000 was invested in the fund, and as the contributions to it came from company revenue that would otherwise have been classified as profits, it is not difficult to realize this was a useful way of avoiding income-tax payments.

This particular example is only one of many thousands of similar plans that are specially drawn up for company executives or business owners and have passed the revenue department requirements as registered pension plan instruments.

They are different entirely from the company pension plan which is open to all employees and which gives them and their firms an opportunity of putting money away on a regular basis to meet requirements of their staffs at retirement age.

The revenue department has wakened up to the loss of national revenue accruing from the "top hat" pension plan, and it has announced that in future all plans of this type now awaiting registration will be turned down if they do not meet a new standard of requirements.

It is understood that several hundreds of such plans are held up in the processing stage at Ottawa.

The executive-type pension has been used by business for several years as a means of supplying incentive to the highly paid official for whom a straight increase in salary would go largely to the government in income tax.

In this respect it is not unlike the allied gimmick of giving key employees an option to buy company stock over a number of years at a fixed price.

Real Caouette's Consistent Cause

By RICHARD JACKSON, Columnist Ottawa Bureau

SO Creditiste Leader Real Caouette says plans are in the political works to expand his Quebec-based federal party on a national scale.

Former prime minister John Diefenbaker has met this weekend in Sherbrooke, deep in Quebec's green and lovely Eastern Townships, to put the party on a national basis, with delegates attending the founding convention from all corners of the nation.

That was when Caouette came back from the 1962 election with 31 members and the Conservatives found themselves a minority which crumbled in a year.

Former prime minister Pearson was another who laughed off Real Caouette and to his surprise was soon crying.

And that was when Caouette came back from the '63 election with 24 members and the Liberals found they were in the minority position where they remained for five years of uncertain power.

In both elections, Caouette and his men took more than enough seats to deny majorities to Conservatives and Liberals alike.

In both elections, too, when former Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson teamed with Caouette, it was the Creditistes and not the Socreds who returned by far the most members and ruled the splinter party roost.

And after Creditistes and Socreds split, it was Caouette's little band rather than the New Democrats who held the life-and-death power balance for those minority governments.

In voting crunches, both Grits and Tories have grovelled for Caouette's make-or-break support—the last time just this spring when the Creditistes rescued the Liberals from the disaster of defeat on former Finance Minister Sharp's tax bill.

Above everything else, though, give Real Caouette this: he's consistent.

When he first came to Parliament 22 years ago—yes, it was back in 1946—he was an ardent federalist, and has so remained ever since.

He was for "One Canada" long before John Diefenbaker coined the phrase, and Pierre Trudeau purchased and parlayed it into power.

Caouette and his Creditistes have met this weekend in Sherbrooke, deep in Quebec's green and lovely Eastern Townships, to put the party on a national basis, with delegates attending the founding convention from all corners of the nation.

Then, leaving his 34 Creditistes behind to keep Commonsense, he sets out on an Ontario-Maine-Prairie-West Coast tour.

By the time the next election comes up on the calendar, he figures to have a candidate in every riding.

Can he swing it, more important, make it as the "Third Force" in Parliament, perhaps replacing the New Democrats?

Consider his credentials.

He sets out in Harnard some of the most appealing of them.

It was the speech he made in the Commons on his return with an interparliamentary delegation from France.

French Premier Couve de Murville was in Quebec City trying to lord it over the Union Nationale leaders, striving to outpace Prime Minister Trudeau, and with magnificent composure addressing himself to Canadians on their relations with France.

Real Caouette talked back. He did it first and did it best. In Canada's Parliament.

He had been to France and the French were welcome to it. France talked of saving Canada, but from what Caouette had seen, it was more like Canada saving France.

To submit to France's embrace would be to take the Great Leap Backward for 50 years. French wages and salaries were a third of Canada's, and French prices double.

"Before trying to solve our problems," Caouette told the applauding Commons. "they should start solving their own—and they have enough to keep them busy for the next 100 years."

Vive Real Caouette and his consistent 22-year cause: Canada.

A Time of Uncertainty

Familiar Political Landmarks Going

By LUBOR J. ZINK from Ottawa

BOTH at home and abroad the political landscape is changing its contours. Pretty soon so many of the familiar landmarks will be gone that even experienced observers and interpreters of the scene will need new orientation maps.

At home we not only have an instant prime minister who has yet to show which way he is going, but with Daniel Johnson out of the picture and premiers Manning and Smallwood on their way out, the established pattern of provincial politics within the framework of Confederation is also receding into the region of guesswork.

Around the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia has upset most of the assumptions and calculations of the "detente" years at the very moment when the United States, tormented by a whole series of explosive internal ferment, is choosing a new president. And Western Europe, fearful of Moscow's intentions, finds its urge for greater unity once again frustrated by the intransigence of de Gaulle's France.

The common denominator of all these pressures and counter-pressures is uncertainty which grips nations and sends people searching in all directions either for visionary Utopias or for pieces of firm ground in the familiar past.

In the United States this dichotomy of the general ferment lacks a symbol around which the make-believe element could rally and organize its thrust. Hence the visible polarization of political forces is taking place mainly on the other side of the scale where Nixon and Wallace profit from fear of anarchy.

In Canada the trend is right now in the opposite direction. Raised by the excitement of the dream-world of Expo, Canadians demonstrated in the June election that they yearn for change—any change that would break the monotony, the dull routine of our parochial political bickering.

Cultivated by the information media and the academic community, it was this mood which found in Pierre Trudeau the personification of its vague aspiration. The identification with an alleged apostle of change was so swift and emotionally turbulent that in the excitement the direction and content of Trudeau's promise of change became irrelevant.

It was taken for granted that the hero of the restless mood would live up to the multitude of a wide variety of expectations vested in him and that, once installed in office with a working majority in the Commons, he could do no wrong.

Starting with Mr. Trudeau's heartless do-nothing reactions to the tragedies of Biafra and Czechoslovakia, via his cancellation of the winter work program and his dismal opening speeches in Parliament, to the abandonment of his promise of a balanced budget, the country has been learning that the Prime Minister of the election campaign may not be able to perform the miracles expected of him.

The extent of this realization was revealed in a recent national poll which indicated that blind hero worship is being replaced by reservation of judgment. The identification of the prime minister's performance.

'Melancholy Throuback'

Suez Canal By-Pass

By IRENE DEESON from Cairo

THREE hundred lorries are beginning this month a crash program of land transport between Suez and Ismailia, thus bypassing the closed Suez Canal and completing a link between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea.

This is a melancholy throwback to the mid-19th century, before the Suez Canal was built. Britain at that time preferred to have the two seas separated by a barrier of land. She was jealous of her monopoly of power in the Indian Ocean and had no wish to encourage expansion in that direction either by Russia or France.

When France pressed the Egyptian government to pierce the Suez isthmus, Britain won temporarily, with the half-way solution of an overland route—the Alexandria-Cairo railway, later prolonged to Suez. It speeded up transport to the east without flinging open to Britain's rivals an uninterrupted shipping route to the Far East.

The Suez Canal was opened, however, in 1869. Closed now, and sitting up since the Arab-Jewish war the canal is settling into its new role of a barrier between the armed forces of Israel on the Sinai peninsula and those of Egypt, watchful and frustrated on the western bank. The closure has disrupted trade across the world, robbed Egypt of a main source of revenue, and altered trading patterns of countries south of the canal.

Reopening the canal would benefit all Europe, Britain foremost, the Soviet Union, the Near and Far East. For Israel, occupying the East bank of the waterway, the canal is economically unimportant, its reopening desirable only if Egypt grants her the right of passage. For the United States, the canal has little commercial value, and a congested waterway at this strategic point is even an asset, in so far as it robs the Soviet Union of quick naval access to the Far East.

Commenting on fears expressed in Israel recently that Egypt might attempt to reopen the canal with the help of Soviet dredgers, Dr. Mohamed Zayyat, an official spokesman for the United Arab Republic, found it strange that whereas in 1869 the world was worried about the dangers of closing the waterway, today's talk was only about dangers involved in reopening it.

But there is little or no hope of a change in the situation until the Israeli forces withdraw from the Sinai and conditions in the area return to normal. Then sea traffic will have to follow the long round-the-Cape route for an unpredictable time.

An oil pipeline from Suez to Alexandria will solve part of the problem, but it will not go into operation until 1970, with an initial flow of 50 million tons a year to be increased later to between 90 million and 100 million. Apart from oil, a daily average of 12,000 tons of goods passed through the Canal before the war. This, too, must now go by other, longer and more expensive routes.

Last August the Egyptian government decided to establish an emergency land-route transport system between Suez and Port Said, to help shipping companies otherwise sending their goods round the Cape. Now the plan is ready.

The 100-kilometre-long overland route will account for about 3,000 tons of foreign goods daily. Time saved on this shorter route will make up for the inconvenience of trans-shipment.

Offers have been received from several European countries, the Middle and Far East for transporting via the new Overland Route cargo ranging from consumer goods to industrial equipment.

Food Shortage

New Hope On Farms

By THOMAS LAND from London

THE agricultural revolution sweeping the developing world has produced dramatically increased crop yields. Thus the danger of widespread food shortage may, in the view of agricultural scientists, become a nightmare of the past by the end of the next decade.

After two years of poor harvests, the world's overall food production jumped upwards by 3 per cent in 1967. Much more important, reports the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, the increase in crop yields was twice as high in the developing regions alone.

"It now seems," says the FAO, "that the potential exists for a much more rapid increase." In the centre of its hopes stands the deeply conservative backward subsistence farmer who has begun to yield to the temptations of modern agricultural science.

Dr. R. E. Robinson, chairman of a recent Cambridge conference on the rural base for national development, has put it this way: "Modern farm technology has the power to transform the (food) situation because it offers immensely increased economic incentives to the hitherto conservative farmer to improve his methods. "Although he is not usually tempted to change his ways for a mere 10-to-20 per cent increase in yields, he may well consider a new approach now that the use of the latest technology can often double or treble his income. This is why agriculture is now on the move."

The conference was attended by some 150 distinguished representatives from 40 countries. They concluded that, "As modern methods of farming spread, there is every hope that within the next 10 years many developing countries will not only be able to feed their increasing populations, but will produce substantial surpluses of farm products."

FAO Director-General A. H. Boerma warns, however, that last year's rich harvests, due partly to fine weather, did not by themselves change the world's destiny. Decades of persistence by scientists, governments and international organizations have led the world food situation into a new stage of transition and hope. But that hope can be fulfilled only if the promising long-term trends are intensified.

The trends combine advances in agricultural science, economics and education in the developing world.

Recently developed high yielding varieties of cereals are being increasingly sown in the more advanced developing regions of Africa and Asia. The same countries tend to lead the developing world in expanding irrigation schemes, running widely accessible agricultural training centres and making available sophisticated synthetic fertilizers and pesticides.

The governments of these striding regions tend to encourage economically viable agricultural co-operatives, foster central farming and marketing services and help in the provision of relatively easy credit for growers.

Thus the most modern developing countries of Africa and Asia have drawn up the blueprint for putting science at the disposal of the subsistence farmer and exporting the agricultural revolution to the rest of the hungry world.

But that does not mean that Mr. Manning's idea has no merit. It is a serious, however, he should start with a better name for his project, because one of the things that hampers the Tories is the conservative label.

They and Mr. Manning should realize that in this day and age no party using the word conservative in any combination of its name can hope to capture the change-seeking imagination of the public mind.

Emigration of the African Elite

By OTTO VON HARSBURG

IF one visits the leading industries of Europe he will be struck by the number of black workers employed there. In most cases, they are not just ordinary laborers. One finds among them a high percentage of students or academic graduates.

In hospitals also we find Asian or black doctors. A recent study has shown that in Paris alone, there are more Togolese doctors than there are medical men trained in French universities in that African state. A report from Iran says that in New York there are more Iranian doctors who have received their degrees in America than those who have returned to their country after completing their studies.

One can no longer deny that the elite of Africa and certain Asian states have a tendency to emigrate into white countries; often they also leave the profession for which they have been trained to engage in manual labor.

The expatriates admit that, partly at least, they are attracted by higher pay. But this is only one side of the picture. At least as important is the fact that these men, once accustomed to European living standards, become unable to re-adapt themselves to their home country. Furthermore, in states with a strong tribal tradition a protracted absence leads to expulsion from the native community. Thus students who have lived abroad for years no longer dare to return to their native area.

This evolution has a growing importance since it affects an increasing number of young men. The white countries unwillingly impoverish the underdeveloped nations by siphoning off their elite.

The fundamental cause of this unhappy state of affairs is rooted in a widespread error. Europeans believe that one can help the new countries by giving their youth scholarships so that they may study in our universities. Of course, this is the simplest way to educate them. Nevertheless, the final result is to worsen underdevelopment by extracting from the colored countries the potentially most dynamic forces.

This is the reason the best Africans, like President Houphouët-Boigny of the Ivory Coast and President Abidjo of Cameroun, have asked Europe and America to revise their policies. They should end the massive distribution of scholarships and let the funds finance the creation of universities in the less developed countries.

Only by creating elites and maintaining them in their country of origin will we be able to resolve the tensions that afflict the world today.

Mental Illness Common Among Nuclear Sub Crews

By WILLIAM OSLER
The London Sunday Times

Madness was an occupational hazard among the crews of the tea clippers in the 19th century. These ships often spent months out of sight of land and under the stress of racing other ships it was not unknown for a captain to become quite insane.

But what of the present day successors of the clipper sailors, the 10,000 officers and men of the 41 American Polaris submarines? They too spend two months or more at sea with no contact with the outside world and in the full knowledge that they are a reed with the wind to destroy life on an unprecedented scale.

A report in the American Journal of Psychiatry by Dr. Jonathan Serzner, a New York psychiatrist who served as a submarine medical officer, suggests that, despite intense screening, minor mental disturbance is common under these circumstances. But serious psychiatric illness is mercifully rare.

Polaris crews — each submarine has two — are made up of 12 to 15 officers and 100 to 130 men. All are volunteers who have to pass strict physical and psychological tests before they are accepted for training. After each leave the crews are flown from America to bases such as that of Holy Loch in Scotland to take over the submarine. They refit as fast as possible and then patrol for about 60 days continuously submerged. The isolation is daunting. Though occasional personal messages from home may be received, none at all are transmitted from the submarine and this separation from their families is a major problem for the crews. The sailors work two four-hour watches a day but the remaining hours are packed with activities to keep them occupied. The pace seems to be hectic — lectures and classes are held for officers and men to become more highly qualified in the submarine service, there are frequent film shows, casino nights, improvised entertainments, religious services and a 1,000-book library. Despite all this activity, psychological problems still arise, according to Dr. Serzner. Sex was a major topic of conversation at first, but after a few weeks interest in the subject declined, and at about the same time the pin-ups became replaced with pictures of grossly unattractive women — a sour grapes reaction.

equal this helped to provoke his breakdown.

The submarine had a good supply of drugs and a strait-jacket but no sick bay, so that the man had to be treated in his usual berth. Nor was there any possibility of landing him.

Fortunately, after a period of heavy sedation and close supervision, his mental state improved, and after a further period of hospital treatment he returned to duty — but not in submarines.

Studies of other groups of men isolated from civilization, such as scientists in the Antarctic or cave explorers, have shown the importance of maintaining the routine of a 24-hour day and of keeping the mind occupied if mental breakdown is to be avoided.

Even so, the rate of minor mental illness in naval Antarctic shore units is seven times as high as normal.

As fleets of nuclear submarines proliferate the chances increase that a captain will go mad.

Dr. Serzner assures his readers that "all on board are impressed with the terrible destructiveness" of the 16 missiles that each submarine carries, and that civilians need have no fear of "a madman pressing the button." as the procedure for firing requires verification by the captain and two officers. But the lesson of history is that a madman in command is only too often obeyed.

Most Argentines Don't Care

Political Freedom Still Banned

By PENNY LEROUX, from Buenos Aires

The Argentine military regime has told Argentines that at least four more years will elapse before it will permit a return of political activity.

Political parties, congress and elections were banned immediately after the mid-1966 military coup. The dictatorship then established has been accepted with little more than superficial grumbling.

Most Argentines distrust the discredited politicians of the past and remain apathetic toward the current reform-minded government.

The government recently announced it is embarking on the second phase of the revolution — a four-year social period. This is part of a plan outlined by the military when it assumed power. It was felt that the problems to be attacked in order of importance were first, the economy; second, social problems; and third, politics.

Keystones of this second period will be an overhaul of social benefits and working conditions in general, with an eye to their effect on the economy.

Government ministries and agencies have been ordered to continue reducing their deficits and advised that the only way to cover the new projected wage costs is to fire more employees and become more efficient.

Private industry has received much the same message. Since employers are expected to absorb half the wage increase without increasing prices, they must become more efficient to maintain current profit margins.

Basic Recommendation Counter to Commission's Case

Wootton Report Illogical

The royal commission on car insurance raved to the brink, then with commendable restraint resisted the temptation to hurl itself into the abyss. The leap it didn't take, of course, would have involved a recommendation that the proposed compulsory basic insurance policy it recommends for all B.C. drivers should be government-run, rather than by private firms.

This is all the more remarkable because throughout much of the two-volume report, the commissioners seemed to be building a case for government insurance.

The Saskatchewan government scheme, according to the report, provides good basic coverage at reasonable cost and has a form of the no-fault system in determining payment of benefits.

The commission produced figures which showed that while the average cost of processing a claim by private insurance companies was approximately $25, in Saskatchewan it was closer to $18. While the two figures were not strictly comparable, the report said, the $7 difference must be noted.

The implication, very clear to anyone who reads the report, was that in B.C. we should be getting our accident claims processed at lower cost.

The report also contained some rather harsh criticism of the car insurance industry in the province, which for the latest year quoted in the report (1966) comprised nearly 175 firms doing close to $75,000,000 worth of business. The commission castigated the industry for its lack of competition, hedged a bit on the price-fixing issue, and finally, rather bullishly, said while there might not be a case that justified action under the Combines Investigation Act there was a remarkable similarity between rates charged for various types of car insurance by individual firms.

Then, reversing its field quickly so that anyone who had been following the logic expressed in the report was left, so to speak, flat-footed, it said that the job of providing the compulsory basic policy proposed for B.C. should be left to private firms.

In doing so, the commissioners admitted they were relying very heavily on effective control over premiums to be exerted by the proposed government-appointed B.C. Auto Insurance Board.

The board would set maximum rates annually for the basic policy. It would keep its own statistics and actuarial studies and presumably would be given the powers necessary to ensure competition between private firms offering supplementary coverage on a voluntary basis.

Only if this system doesn't work, as it probably would, would the board have a chance of doing it and when put into practice, does the commission think that a government insurance office should be opened. Then, however, it claims the government should take over the sole selling in B.C. of all car insurance.

CAPITAL REPORT

By IAN STREET

It's as if the commission, having made up its mind from the start that conditions in the province were not right for government-run car insurance, kept trying to get around the most logical conclusion from its findings.

Then, when that failed, it said, well, if the industry doesn't co-operate, then let the government take over, but not now, at some indefinite time in the future.

The report talks of "rigidities and more limited innovation" in a government plan, the possible loss of service and higher premium cost of other types of insurance if car insurance became a government monopoly, and adds that the magnitude of savings from a government plan would in any event be significantly reduced if its compromise proposal was put into effect.

One obvious and immediate saving from a government-run plan would be in the $3 agent's commission on the $16.76 estimated price of $6 per cent of all the basic policies written under the scheme. This coverage would be statutory therefore paperwork should be kept to the minimum and there is no reason why savings should not be handed on to motorists.

The commission also admits the Saskatchewan government plan is "very workable" but adds the social and economic conditions which existed in that province when it was introduced in 1946 are very different from those in B.C. today.

True, but is that any reason for not making all possible savings in the cost of car insurance?

Obviously the commission thinks that a firm shove from the government would be enough to spark competition between private firms which now seem quite content to bumble along, secure in the knowledge as long as no one starts drastically cutting rates there'll be enough business for all.

The commission, of course, has annoyed the insurance industry by its criticisms and the threat of government intervention. And it also saddened the lawyers who get a

Trustees Showed Disciplined Militancy

Firm But Not Vindictive

British Columbia's school trustees exercised a well-disciplined militancy last week in response to the continuing shortage of classrooms.

They struck hard and effectively at Premier Bennett and Education Minister Brothers, but avoided the tempting slide into vindictiveness.

They elected an aggressive president, James Campbell. But they turned thumbs down on a far more militant Bennett-baiter, Greater Victoria School Board chairman Peter Bunn, when he ran for the important post of director.

It can be said that the trustees are fed up with the government's near-freeze on school construction and no longer are willing to go along with the tight money excuse.

Education Minister Brothers did not impress the trustees in his first major address since he got the portfolio. Unaccountably he put aside his prepared speech, summarized what it contained, then asked the trustees to bear with him while he studied the problems of education. Trustees later commented that he should have had more to offer than that,

A LOOK AT LEARNING

By BILL STAVDAL

having been appointed last spring. Though Mr. Brothers said the government is in effect easing the restrictions on construction, he undercut his claim by adding that gymnasiums and activity rooms are not yet on the approved list.

In a press conference later he announced that the emergency cost ceilings of last winter remain in effect, which made trustees even more sceptical.

The motion of censure that evening was the result. Even here, trustees exercised a sensible restraint. They amended the censure motion so as to direct it against the government, not the department of education. The feeling was that censure aimed at the department would alienate civil servants with whom the trustees must continue to work. Frank Reinder, the dove-turmed hawk, was unhappy with the censure motion. It was he who set the tone of the convention Sunday with a scathing, blistering attack on government school building policy.

Yet he feared the censure motion would do more harm than good. And so Mr. Reinder rose Tuesday to nominate Mr. Brothers to the honorary presidency of the BCSTA, seconded by Jim Campbell.

It was an honor which the trustees could have easily withheld if they had been bloody-minded. It would have done the BCSTA damage in the public eye, and the trustees knew it. Practically all of them voted for Mr. Brothers' honorary presidency. Another indicator of the trustee's judgment and mood was the vote on the government's education finance policy. The executive had proposed a motion calling on the government to amend its finance formula in a fundamental way.

The large majority of trustees felt that it was too early to judge the formula, and decided to stick with it for a year at least.

However, a livelier confrontation can be expected in the coming year under the presidency of Jim Campbell. For years he has been known as often too outspoken, though others around him say he has learned restraint lately.

Immediately after his election he became diplomatically noncommittal about possible future relations with the Bennett government.

But on the convention floor next day he was heard to make this remark: "I am disturbed that a very senior person in education in this province told me as an article of faith that change must come slowly. 'We must be equipped to speed up the process.'"

'Good Boy' In Jail

"I've been a good boy all my life," 15-year-old Eugene Charles Simard told Magistrate J. A. Byers in Central Magistrate's Court Saturday.

"Every time I go to jail, it's on account of liquor," he said.

Simard pleaded guilty to theft under $50. Bay investigator Lloyd Klassen told the court the accused had been spotted putting a combination barometer-radio under his coat. He had $37 in his pocket that would have covered the cost, court learned.

'EVERY TIME'

Mr. Klassen said the accused smelled strongly of alcohol when he was picked up.

"I'm 15 and a bit," Simard told the magistrate. "Any time I go to jail it's on account of liquor."

"You are sentenced to six months in prison," Magistrate Byers told the accused. "You will have to learn to keep your hands off other people's property."

Prosecutor Cory Stoltz said Simard had a criminal record, and this will be his 17th conviction.

Week on the Prairies

Bill Increases Farm Loans

The Commons has given unanimous approval in principle to a bill increasing the amounts that may be borrowed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

The bill increases to $25,000 from $15,000 maximum loans under the act. It also wipes out the present maximum 5-per-cent interest ceiling and gives the government authority to set a floating rate.

The Alberta Federation of Labor is being urged to favor establishment of a 30-hour, five-day work week, without wage deductions, for all Canadians.

The resolution, passed at the three-day annual convention in Lethbridge, said automation and technological advances have made the proposal both feasible and necessary.

Delegates also approved a resolution that would increase the minimum hourly wage to $1.75 from $1.25, but a proposal for a minimum wage of $2 was defeated.

Highways Minister Gordon Taylor of Alberta says recommendations of British Columbia's Royal Commission on auto insurance are "highly interesting and challenging."

He said in Edmonton the commission's report will be studied by an Alberta legislative committee set up to study driving habits.

"In effect, the report says the industry had better smarten up — or else, which is what I have been saying."

Mr. Taylor said he was pleased the commission "simply hadn't agreed with everything the industry is doing and tried to whitewash the situation."

Saskatchewan's first pulp mill has been officially opened in Prince Albert and brought with it a promise of more industry for the north-central Saskatchewan city.

Metropolitan Winnipeg's $23,000,000 insurance policy against Red River flooding was christened with a symbolic spray-load from an Otter water bomber.

The insurance is the floodway, a 25-mile channel which will swing the Red's overflow safely around built-up areas.

In the spring of 1950 the river put one-eighth of Greater Winnipeg under water, flooded 10,500 homes and forced the evacuation of 100,000 persons.

A road-show opening of the Broadway hit Funny Girl, scheduled as the first presentation of the Manitoba Theatre Centre's new season in Winnipeg, was cancelled last night because of rain.

The MTC said ticket-holders for all performances of the scheduled week-long run will be advised of arrangements to honor their purchases on an exchange or refund basis.

Construction in Esquimalt is shaping up this year to give the municipality one of its best building periods for some time.

"Building started out slow at the beginning of the year, but has steadily gained momentum ever since," says Esquimalt's building inspector William Edgington.

NEARING MARK

"Building permits for 1968 could reach the $2,000,000 mark," he said, noting that about $1,500,000 worth of building permits have been issued so far this year.

"And the year is far from over yet. We still have a ways to go."

"Last year permits only totalled $700,000."

"In the office I have between $70,000 and $80,000 worth of permits that are still being processed," he said.

The 84-suite apartment building at 831 Dunsmuir with its $700,000 permit gave a big boost to the area's construction figures.

ALTERATIONS

Mr. Edgington also pointed out there has been heavy construction of side-by-side duplexes this year in the municipality, also several large single-family dwellings in the Rock Heights district.

He said there have also been many permits issued for alterations to existing houses.

"The bulk of the working men are staying put and are adding rooms and making other alterations to their homes rather than build new houses," Mr. Edgington said.

He observed that inquiries for apartment construction within the municipality has been particularly heavy.

MANY INQUIRIES

"It seems as though someone is always in my office with a list of measurements or questions about zoning. They may not be planning to build here right away, but they certainly are inquiring about the possibilities," he said.

Another boost to this year's construction will be the sale of 17 lots in phase 7 in the Rock Heights area.

FOR SALE SOON

Mr. Edgington said the lots are expected to be put up for sale soon. He did not know the exact date or the price of the lots.

An unofficial source said last week the Esquimalt-Dockyard branch of the Royal Canadian Legion plans to build a new hall on its property near the corner of Esquimalt and Admirals Roads.

The source said the building would be built for approximately $100,000.

Mr. Edgington would not confirm or deny the building of the new legion hall.

But he agreed that it was a good year for building in Esquimalt.

But he agreed that it was a good year for building in Esquimalt.

He said there have also been many permits issued for alterations to existing houses.

"The bulk of the working men are staying put and are adding rooms and making other alterations to their homes rather than build new houses," Mr. Edgington said.

He observed that inquiries for apartment construction within the municipality has been particularly heavy.

"It seems as though someone is always in my office with a list of measurements or questions about zoning. They may not be planning to build here right away, but they certainly are inquiring about the possibilities," he said.

Another boost to this year's construction will be the sale of 17 lots in phase 7 in the Rock Heights area.

Mr. Edgington said the lots are expected to be put up for sale soon. He did not know the exact date or the price of the lots.

An unofficial source said last week the Esquimalt-Dockyard branch of the Royal Canadian Legion plans to build a new hall on its property near the corner of Esquimalt and Admirals Roads.

The source said the building would be built for approximately $100,000.

Mr. Edgington would not confirm or deny the building of the new legion hall.

Arms Pact Unconditional?

Arabs Concerned About Arab Raids

HEBRON, Jordan (UPI)—An unprecedented assembly of more than 200 Arab leaders of Israeli-occupied communities decided Saturday to send a delegation to Amman, Jordan, to urge commando leaders to leave their cities alone.

Hebron Mayor Sheikh Mohammad Ali Jassari called the meeting to protest a commando grenade attack which injured 47 Israeli pilgrims in Hebron's Macphela grotto Wednesday. The incident triggered Israeli reprisals against local Arab merchants.

Czech Party Split

Anti-Dubcek Faction Linked with Soviets

PRAGUE (AP)—An opposition group linked to the Soviet Army has sprung up within the ranks of the Czechoslovak Communist party, threatening Alexander Dubcek, the liberal and popular party leader at the base of his power, Czechoslovak reformers reported Saturday.

They said the party leadership was studying documents describing a Prague gathering last Wednesday of about 300 anti-Dubcek Communists with four officers of the Soviet army of occupation. The group cheered speeches attacking Czechoslovak reforms since Dubcek took over last January, and demanded a government shakeup and punishment of pro-Dubcek journalists, the sources said.

The meeting came to light as the press and Dubcek himself confirmed that workers' resolutions and letters have been flowing into Prague demanding that the occupation forces leave. This is despite Dubcek's commitment to sign a treaty with the Soviet Union for some to remain.

It could not be determined how seriously leaders regarded the existence of the anti-Dubcek party cell, something the Soviet Union was unable to produce in its unsuccessful effort to form a puppet government after the invasion by Warsaw Pact countries Aug. 20.

But it seemed clear that Dubcek was referring to this group among others when he said Friday in a speech: "I consider it necessary to state openly that nobody may utilize the situation that has arisen for creating an opposition — least of all inside the party — or for any other kind of illegal acts based on any platform... this is a typical warning and I am sure that it will be understood by all honest citizens."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Informed sources said Saturday they now have reason to believe stories published in Israel reporting a new, large-scale arms deal between the Soviet Union and Egypt.

The sources, who cannot be identified, said the Soviet Union pledged to provide Egypt with 200 supersonic fighter bombers and up to 500 medium tanks. The fighter bombers will be of the Sukhoi-7 and MIG-21 types.

IN MOSCOW

The agreement is understood to have been signed in Moscow several weeks ago, but it is unknown when the weapons will be delivered.

According to earlier intelligence the deal was conditional, meaning that the Soviets agreed to deliver the planes and tanks only if the United States complied with Israel's request for American Phantom fighter bombers.

The sources now say, however, that the deal was unconditional and irrespective of any U.S.-Israeli arms agreement.

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran has concluded a new $100,000,000 arms agreement with the Soviet Union, the newspaper Al Anwar said Saturday.

The paper, in a dispatch from Kuwait, said Iran will pay for the arms in Iranian commodities. It did not say what types of weapons were involved in the deal.

Iran, a member of the Central Treaty Organization, already has received $100,000,000 worth of anti-aircraft guns and communications equipment from Moscow.

ANOTHER PAPER

Another paper, Al Jarida, reported that a new government is expected soon in Syria and that half the seats will go to Communist candidates.

It said the decision was taken by Syrian strongman Maj. Gen. Salah Jadid under pressure from Soviet officers serving with the Syrian army.

The reported Communist bid for more power in Syria, the paper said, was due to the planned formation by Jadid and his supporters of a new government that would be less extremist than the present ruling Baath-Socialist party team.

Saigon Deplores French Action

From UPI, AP
South Vietnam Saturday deplored France's action in permitting the Viet Cong's National Liberation Front to open an information centre in Paris. It was considering making a formal protest to President de Gaulle.

An official government statement issued in Saigon said the French move was "in contradiction with the neutrality and impartiality" required of a government which is playing host to the Washington-Hanoi talks on the Vietnam war.

HANOI REGIME
"The opening of this bureau will considerably strengthen the propaganda means of the Hanoi regime — of which, it is well known, the National Liberation Front is a mere emanation," the Saigon statement said.

In Paris, informed South Vietnamese sources said the Saigon government was discussing a possible protest to France in the wake of the opening of the office by two NLF officials who arrived via Moscow Friday.

SIKONG ATTACK
In Saigon, U.S. command said American marines repelled a strong enemy attack near the Thung Due Green Beret camp despite virtually no air support because of bad weather.

A few fighter-bombers and C-47 gunships equipped with rapid-firing machine guns managed to find holes in the cloud cover to strike the North Vietnamese, but the heavy overcast prevented saturation strikes of enemy positions.

After a 15-hour battle with small arms, machine guns and artillery, the enemy pulled back. The marines counted 31 North Vietnamese dead and reported eight leathernicks killed and 20 wounded.

The battle raged in jungled foothills 27 miles northwest of Da Nang, an area where there are believed to be between 5,000 and 7,500 North Vietnamese troops. The marines, from the 5th Regiment, 1st Division, were part of a large allied force sent into the area a week ago to relieve pressure on the Thung Due camp.

Far to the south, enemy pumped 24 mortar rounds into My Tho, a provincial capital 35 miles southwest of Saigon in the Mekong Delta.

Shake Rustlers, Tricksters Spoil Hunting

"Shake rustlers and 'enterprising' hunters who make their own 'active logging' signs and then place them at the entrances to logging roads they hunt, so they will have a private hunting area, are putting a damper on the program of allowing recreational access to logging areas.

Those are two of the annoying things that bother logging company operators, who outlined their problems to me at a meeting of 24 logging company managers, foresters and fire officials of the Cowichan Lake-Alberni-Sooke timber operations at Nitinat Camp a week ago.

"It is the one-in-100 hunter who puts a black mark on the other 99," said Lew Way, logging manager for all B.C. Forest products operations in the Cowichan Lake area.

The logging officials were pleased more and more hunters "seem to be doing the patrolling for us," said Mr. Way.

As interesting disclosure seemed to be that the least aggravating damage is done in the areas which have the most public access.

"We open as much area as possible and we have very little problem," said Ted Matrice, forester at BCFF Port Renfrew area.

But a mounting problem in that area, where three shake operators are working, is shake rustlers who steal roofing shakes and cedar logs during the weekends.

Gordon Dods, of the Honeyman Bay-Gordon River co-owners, said his company has opened up a great deal of new area of public access this year, but is experiencing "quite a rash of aggravating things, especially a disregard for signs."

His company has made up a map of the area showing the main roads and side roads, and outlining the areas which are barred to access because of active logging. BCFF has also prepared a map of its Port Renfrew area and these will be displayed at convenient places.

Truck Road 4, a main logging area, is one road where trespass has been a problem. "One fellow from Victoria even shot a deer where people were working," Mr. Dods said.

One hunter on a Wednesday afternoon went into an area where there is no weekday access and packed out a deer in full view of the dispatch officer.

"It burns employees up when they are not allowed to hunt and they are another hunter pack a deer out," he explained.

He emphasized there are no special privileges allowed company officials.

Mr. Dods also disclosed that this year his company is allowing weekday hunter access into a big area in the old Round camp area. Travel 6 1/2 miles along the Gordon River Road to Truck Road 3 and take that road into a big hunting area. But access is barred beyond the 6 1/2-mile mark, except at weekends.

During the week, access is also allowed in 19 Creek and 16 Creek areas of Pacific Logging, but some hunters who have camped overnight in those areas, nearly lost that weekday privilege for other hunters.

No weekday access is allowed into the Meade Creek area because of the danger of meeting logging trucks working a small area there. "We are trying to work out a way to allow weekday access to other parts of the Meade Creek area, but the first three miles of road is narrow and dangerous and there have been some near-accidents," Mr. Dods explained.

It was in the Gordon River area that some hunters made up their own "active logging" signs to keep hunters out of the area they were hunting.

"It wasn't one of our signs, and I was sure surprised when I saw it blocking one of our public access roads," said Mr. Dods. "The sign is now in our dispatch office."

Other company officials complained they had experienced some trouble with hunters switching locations of active logging signs.

Trigger-happy hunters are an aggravating problem.

One hunter shot up a barrel of gas left out for a fire pump. Bullet holes have been shot in company vehicle tires and in road signs and recreationists have been camping in areas other than those designated for camping.

Most companies reported thefts, some petty, some serious, but they acknowledged these were not necessarily all the work of hunters, but people who enter the areas when access is open.

Officials suspect thieves have been using the opening of hunting season as a cover-up. In some cases, it was acknowledged, disgruntled company employees have been the problem.

Not all the access problems have been with the hunting public. The same rules apply to company officials, and at Port Renfrew, a company employee who was found with a company pickup hunting in an active area, was given a reprimand and stopped.

Another company employee had allowed a friend into an area behind active logging signs. He was found and booted out.

The logging officials said most of their problems occur the first two weeks of hunting season and when deer season opens, this year Nov. 2.

This weekend sees the opening of duck, goose, Wilson's snipe, pheasant and quail seasons on Vancouver Island.

But quail season is limited to that portion of Vancouver Island south of Chemainus River and on Salt Spring, Denman and Hornby Islands. Only cock pheasants are legal game, except from Nov. 9 to 17, when hens will also be legal.

To Play Better Game

Chess Gambles Pay Off

By RAY KERR

With chess showing a tremendous gain in popularity in Greater Victoria — one junior high school alone reports a chess club membership of more than 75 — many youngsters and more advanced players are wondering if there's a clear-cut way of improving their game.

If they take the advice of Bent Larsen, one of the world's leading 10 players, it's actually quite simple.

Translating what the Dane told me during last year's West Coast championships in Santa Monica, Calif., it boils down to something like this:

"If you don't speculate, you don't accumulate."

The 33-year-old grandmaster, who wins tournaments the way Montreal's Stanley Cup champion hockey player, said he's not afraid to take chances on losing individual games.

"It's like being in a boat and leaning out over the water," he said. "I lean pretty far out sometimes — but I usually manage to get back."

Just consider what Larsen's

daring style of play has accomplished on his current North American chess tour:

● He ran away with the U.S. Open, the top North American tournament, winning a game he should have lost against New York's master James Sherwin and getting himself in a number of risky situations. That was worth $1,250 in cash.

● Larsen followed with a ridiculously easy triumph in the Canadian Open in Toronto. He had a completely lost game against Ken Rogoff, a 16-year-old junior from New York, but still got a draw, also winning several double-edged contests. This one was worth $1,000.

● Earlier this month Larsen dropped in on a small, two-day tournament in Salem, N.H., and shared first place with Pal Benko, considered the second best grandmaster in the U.S.

Against Benko, Larsen had a completely lost game — again due to some adventurous gambles — but wiggled out a draw once more. His share of the top prize was worth $625, for two days work.

And so in less than two months, the biggest chess gambler of them all cleared $2,875, without losing a single game.

That should be enough to convince even the most conservative of players that a little gamble can go a long way toward tournament success.

Sailboat Loves to Move Like a Barn-Tired Colt

Story and Picture

By ERITH M. SMITH

People speak of a boat as a live thing, and the saying must surely go far back into the days of sail. A power boat may leap and swing to the touch of throttle or wheel, but the sailboat thrums and moves with a power that belongs to nature.

The helmsman "can meet and guide this power under sail, but the feeling remains that full control belongs to nature, not to man.

Your sailboat is an eager thing, too, like a colt kept too long in the barn. With a wind up you can feel her impatience to be off, even before a shred of sail is up.

With the sails raised to the wind she's swiftly away, and the challenge is there for man to keep control and outwit wind and tide to determine a course through the tussling areas.

Heeded over to the point of wind humming through the stays, the boat seems trying to find her own way, compelling a firm hand on the tiller while she tosses spray like gems in the sun over her shoulder and into the faces of the crew.

This is what it was like our second day out with Tony Burton's intermediate course in sailing at Oak Bay Yacht Club, aboard his Haida-class Raven.

The day taught us other things, as well.

Sailing is far from finished in Greater Victoria waters when summer comes to a close. Before our class began Oak Bay was filled with a score or more sailboats, all jockeying for position in the start of a weekend race.

Many sailboats are put up for the winter, but far from all. Except for the full-scale Gabrielle II, the bay that morning looked like a Swiftsure start in miniature.

Soon the racers had gone beyond sight around Ten Mile Point and, again except for Gabrielle, we didn't see them again until our sailing was done, and we were back on shore to watch the finishers coming in between the breakwater and Mary Tod Island.

We watched with interest, for in this course we would be studying what they were doing.

Some we saw make their turn to the finish line too soon, so they had to tack again and yet again to make the final passage. Others held on till you'd think they'd gone too far, then turned on a course that provided a swift beeline to the race's end.

Because these were experienced sailors and ourselves just nibbling the edge of knowledge, we saw most of the things we'd been warned against in racing. But we did wish we were part of that wind-filled fleet.

Hospital Crisis 'Acute'

Greater Victoria's hospital bed shortage is one of the worst in Canada, says the Victoria Medical Society, endorsing the Oct. 26 hospitals referendum.

The society issued a statement Saturday which declared that southern Vancouver Island had fallen far behind the rest of Canada in providing adequate hospital facilities.

"The situation is alarming," said VMS president Dr. Paul Gervais. "We know of few other areas in Canada with a worse record in meeting hospital needs."

He said it was "imperative" that voters elect a new representative body on the $3,300,000 referendum.

Many of the existing facilities in Greater Victoria are obsolete, he said.

Included in the referendum is money for 600 urgently-needed extended-care beds, $250,000 for future intensive-care beds, $2,500,000 to update and restore equipment in existing facilities, and another $150,000 for land acquisition.

Dr. Gervais said one person in eight has need for a hospital bed each year.

The referendum needs a 60-per-cent affirmative vote to pass.

New Twist from Hamburg

Canadian Banker

Venerable Publication Appears in New Form

By HARRY YOUNG

One of Canada's venerable commercial magazines in the 75-year-old Canadian Banker, which through the years has contained articles by many of Canada's leading economists.

During its long life it has appeared in various forms, and somewhere in the dirty thirties, it changed its name from the Journal of the Canadian Bankers Association.

Its latest edition brings it an entirely new face, with the size of the page increased and the number of editions a year stepped up from four to six.

Another sign of the times is that the august Bank Association has smothered its pride and is allowing the columns to be invaded by paid advertisements.

Otherwise, says the editor, the standards will not be lowered.

The Canadian Banker is also proud of the fact it is an anti-inflationist.

It points out that in 1893—its first year—its annual subscription was $1. This has since grown only to $2, although in its new more frequent form, the subscription will be $3 (unchanged in respect to the price of each issue).

In the first new-style issue there is an article on British Columbia by J. N. Hyland, chairman of B.C. Packers, illustrated with a picture of Victoria's Centennial Square with lights, fountain, flower baskets and all.

Newest Nation Given Freedom

SANTA ISABEL, Equatorial Guinea (UPI) — Spain's Equatorial Guinea Saturday became Africa's 38th country to attain independence since the Second World War.

President Francisco Macias Nguema and Spanish minister of information Manuel Fraga Iribarne, acting as foreign minister, signed a document providing for the transfer of power.

Then the new nation's flag — three horizontal bars of green, white and red topped by a blue triangle — was hoisted on the new government building while a large crowd of Africans watched.

It was from the same flag-staff that the Spanish flag was lowered for the last time at sunset Friday to mark the end of Spain's 382 years of colonial rule.

In a speech proclaiming the independence, Fraga Iribarne indicated continuing warm relations between Spain and Equatorial Guinea.

Tory Rumblings Near Roar

By RICHARD JACKSON
Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — A head of steam is building up in the Conservative Commons caucus — the party's MPs and senators in Parliament — and the safety valve may blow at next February's annual meeting.

Fueled the fire has been the speech to the Greater Winnipeg Conservative Association of party organizer Gene Ebrahman, a former Tory MP, that the party's resources are going to be concentrated in two areas — Quebec and Metro Toronto.

Makes the Maritime, Prairie and rural Ontario MPs feel just great.

CAMP MEN

The groans of aggrieved protest of all but a small inner circle of Conservative MPs are leaking from the caucus that the party now is being run by two areas in the country that have no Tory representation in the Commons — the same Metro Toronto and B.C.

Too many of the organizational and staff men around leader Robert Stanfield in both his parliamentary offices and at party headquarters in midtown Ottawa, complain the rank and file of MPs are either president Dalton Camp's men or others handpicked by E. David Fulton, former Conservative cabinet minister and loser in the last election.

The way things have been going, protest these MPs — and they form the majority of the caucus — the party's elected representatives in Parliament are being downgraded and control of strategy and tactics slipping into the hands of the organization's "backroom boys."

The frustrated members of the official opposition are battling each other often as much as they are the government.

The showdown, to hear the gossip, will come at the annual meeting, 24 members, Stanfield, sending the way the winds are changing, doesn't back up in the face of open opposition in the caucus.

HUNGER AT HOME

Some of the Conservative MPs, Robert Coates of Cumberland in particular, want to know why the Tories are making such a fuss about hunger in Biafra when there is so much want, perhaps even hunger in Canada, particularly in the Maritimes.

James McGrath, Conservative MP for St. John's East in Newfoundland, wants to know how come the government can spend nearly $5,000,000 on the Bilingualism and Biculturalism Commission and nearly $500,000 on the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, while pleading inability to continue the $300,000 subsidy on salt, so essential to the Maritime fishing industry?

"As far as I'm concerned," he says, "the B and B Commission could stand for bingo and baseball."

The delegates studied 600 resolutions Saturday in more than 20 workshops on such subjects as education, language, media, regional development, housing, natural resources, justice and international relations.

Sunday, they were to begin general assembly sessions to establish the new party's program. The general assembly sessions conclude Monday when, among other things, delegates will vote on the party's name.

NAMES SUGGESTED
Five possible names were suggested in a program distributed to delegates. They are: Parti Souverainiste, Parti Souverainisme-Association, Parti du Peuple Souverain, Parti de l'Indépendance du Québec and Mouvement Souverainiste-Association.

The television campaign resembles tactics used by Credit-Union Leader Real Caouette to stir up support for his party between federal election campaigns. The separatists are launching their message to the same winning audience solicited by Caouette.

The telecasts will cover Quebec City, the Gaspé, the Lake St. John region, Rougemont in northwestern Quebec, Trois-Rivières and Sherbrooke in the Eastern Townships.

BOTH APPEARING
Levesque, a popular French-language television commentator before his entry into provincial politics as a Liberal in 1968, will share the telecasts with Gregoire, a former Credit-Union leader who sat in the House of Commons for six years.

Levesque founded the Mouvement Souverainiste-Association after quitting the Liberal party in October, 1967. Gregoire has been president since 1968 of the Ralliement National, founded by disaffected Credit-Unionists prior to the 1965 provincial election.

Quebec's third separatist group, le Rassemblement pour l'indépendance nationale, founded eight years ago, boycotted the weekend founding convention because of disagreement with the declared Levesque policy of continuing state subsidies for English-language schools.

TV Campaign Urges Rally To Separatism

QUEBEC (CP) — René Levesque's separatist party will launch a television campaign for popular support immediately after this weekend's founding convention uniting his Mouvement Souverainiste-Association and Gilles Gregoire's Ralliement National.

A series of weekly telecasts lasting 25 weeks in 10 Quebec centres will begin Oct. 26. A special fund-raising drive was launched at the four-day founding convention to help pay costs of $53,300 for the telecasts covering most of Quebec.

The convention opened Friday night with speeches by Levesque and Gregoire before an estimated 1,000 people gathered to establish a separatist party that advocates secession with the rest of Canada.

Both separatist leaders bitterly criticized Canada's federal system of government. Levesque said Confederation had led to "collective emasculation" of French-speaking people. Gregoire called Confederation "a frustrating and sterile" experience.

The delegates studied 600 resolutions Saturday in more than 20 workshops on such subjects as education, language, media, regional development, housing, natural resources, justice and international relations.

Sunday, they were to begin general assembly sessions to establish the new party's program. The general assembly sessions conclude Monday when, among other things, delegates will vote on the party's name.

Schirra Battling His Stuffy Nose

HOUSTON (UPI) — The aspirin and decongestants Apollo 7 command pilot Walter Schirra took for his head cold were among several pills and medicines supplied astronauts for minor ailments ranging from motion sickness to sunburn.

Astronauts also are provided with motion sickness and diarrhea pills, sun cream, band-aids, eyedrops, pain pills, stimulant pills and a thermometer. The medicines are stored in a seven-by-five-inch packet in the lower equipment bay.

Flight Surgeon John Eickenschmidt said Schirra "has been in this game a long time and rubbed elbows with the flight surgeons enough so he sort of was asking and suggesting at the same time" that he take the pill.

A number of devices are used to monitor the radiation level — one of the biggest health worries on space flights.

Most of the devices do not provide information until the flight is over, but a nuclear particle detection system constantly measures nuclear particle presence in the space ship and sends the readings to the ground.

No Help in Long Flight

Moon Crews On Own

HOUSTON (UPI) — When future Apollo astronauts get their final push to the moon, it could take them several days to get back home if something goes wrong. They would just have to cope with their problem.

In projects Mercury and Gemini, Earth orbiting astronauts in trouble could get back down to Earth in a matter of minutes. And on one Gemini mission — Gemini 8 — two astronauts had to do just that.

On Apollo moonflights, once committed to a lunar course, the ship's orbit would reach so far from Earth that it could take three or four days before the craft would loop the moon and return.

"You just have to live with the situation," said Dr. Werner von Braun, director of the Marshall Space Flight Centre which directs the development of Saturn moon rockets.

"You are pretty far away and there's no choice."

That's why the Earth orbital shakedown run of Apollo 7 is so important. It must prove that the spacecraft and its intricate systems are mature enough to be depended on to support men on the daring lunar adventure.

Apollo 7's flight is scheduled to last 11 days — the longest any presently planned round-trip to the moon would take.

One of the Apollo's most important parts — its powerful maneuvering engine — passed a major test Saturday when it was fired 10 seconds to initiate a rendezvous manoeuvre. But it, like the rest of the moonship systems, will be tested for endurance as well as initial performance.

The near flawless performance of Apollo 7 after the first day of flight encouraged moon program workers, but they know the ship had to continue to perform well for a long time ahead.

Nine of the 10 two-man Gemini spaceflights were successful in 1965 and 1966, but on most of the flights small but significant problems developed in important systems.

Even the last mission in the second generation program, Gemini 12, had troubles. Difficulties developed in the spacecraft's fuel cell electrical powerplants and several attitude control jets failed.

Those types of problems were acceptable in project Gemini, but they're not acceptable in Apollo moon missions.

Space Meals Costly

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)—Housewives who complain about their grocery bill should feel better when they learn it costs $800 a day to feed the Apollo 7 astronauts.

Ninety-nine meals were aboard the space ship when it took off from here Friday. That's three meals a day for each of the three astronauts for the planned 11-day mission.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration reported the total cost of the meals was $18,000—or $200 each.

The high cost results from the necessity for developing dehydratable food and crumble — proof bite — size snacks for use in weightless space. The main meals are made palatable by adding hot or cold water.

Fervor Supplants Strife For Opening of Games

MEXICO CITY (CP) — President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz of Mexico officially opened the first Olympic Games ever held in Latin America Saturday, following a march of athletes from a record 124 countries.

Canada's 144-member delegation, 24th in the order of march, drew tremendous applause from the capacity crowd of 80,000 in the Olympic Stadium. It includes some of the best swimmers here and Canada is looking for its first Olympic medals in this sport since 1936.

PERKY GROUP

The Canadian women were bright red jackets and white skirts that were well above the knee. It was a perky group. The men had black trousers and red jackets.

their star swimmer. The French women wore bright blue dresses and blue hats, the men blue jackets and white slacks.

Britain was also among the smartest, the girls in blue mini-dresses and red straw hats with red ribbons dangling from their blue purses. Lynn Davies, winner of the broad jump at the last Games in Tokyo, dipped the Union Jack as he passed the presidential stand.

South Vietnam drew loud applause with its unusual group, consisting of 12 men in ordinary business suits and two young women in split dresses that reached to their ankles.

At the end of the parade came the big Mexican team, marching last as is traditional for the host nation. The applause was deafening.

The Games were declared open with a 20-word phrase by President Diaz when he said: "Today, October 12, 1968, I declare inaugurated the Olympic Games of Mexico, which commemorate the 19th Olympiad of the modern era."

Committee Insists on Tests

MEXICO CITY (AP)—The International Olympic Committee medical commission insisted Saturday night all girl swimmers who do not take a sex test will be barred from Olympic competition. Prince Alexandre de Merode of Belgium, head of the commission, said some girls have voluntarily taken the test despite the International Swimming Federation's refusal to make the test mandatory.

"We are trying now to determine how many girls have voluntarily taken the test. If we find even one girl who has not taken it, she will be barred from competition."

Win and Tie for Cougars

IT BEATS ME

By Jim Tang

B.C. LIONS will surely have to consider giving Paul Brothers another look after yesterday's game in Toronto. Given a complete game for the first time, the former Oregon State University quarterback looked quite promising as he directed Lions to their biggest scoring total of the season . . . it was a help for Victoria O'Rourke but no one connected with the club was at all pleased about the MacKay being cut by the Canadian national soccer team. MacKay was on the list of players selected for the first World Cup game against Bermuda, then was surprisingly called in and told he hadn't made the team . . . although Spokane Shockers announced a crowd of 12,300 fans for a Continental Football League game against Seattle Seahawks, it appears that the Western Division is having its usual troubles. The Seahawks went home to draw no more than 50 fans for an interlocking game against Little Rock . . . silliest name for a sports award is the one Schenley gives for the "most outstanding" player in the Canadian Football League. It makes one wonder who might be the least outstanding . . . on that subject, Calgary-quarterback Peter Liske is playing well enough to become the second player-Jackie Parker was the first—to win the award two years in a row. However, Toronto-halfback Bill Symons and the fellow who would get this vote, Saskatchewan-halfback George Reed, have provided credentials that are difficult to overlook . . . Simon Fraser University will hold its fourth annual basketball clinic next Saturday between 8 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. and any coach or player interested is welcome. Gary Taylor at Oak Bay High School can provide any additional information needed . . . it seems that Canadian television networks haven't done right by their advertisers in not scheduling even one of the Saskatchewan-Calgary football games this season. Tomorrow's game would certainly draw a much bigger audience than the B.C.-Montreal affair. Even in these parts.

Football success is not always accomplished on the field. Sometimes it is done with a telephone. Such, Toronto columnist Jim Proudfoot relates, was the case this season for Ottawa Rough Riders, as good a bet as any to win the Grey Cup because assistant-coach Kelly Mote is a fast man with a dial. The player who may make the difference for the Riders is a talented blur named Vic Washington, perhaps the best rookie import of the season in the Canadian Football League. But for Mote's addition to sports-page reading and his act-on disposition, B.C. Lions might not be fighting for nothing better than fourth place or Hamilton Tiger-Cats might be Grey Cup favorites.

Mote, Proudfoot says, noticed an item in the New York Times which said that Washington wouldn't be returning to the University of Wyoming because of a fight with a referee in a house-league basketball game. Mote was instantly galvanized into action. Like everyone whose business it is to know about these things, he knew that Washington was an outstanding halfback who was a cinch to be an early pick in the National and American Football League at the end of his senior year. The Ottawa coach picked up his telephone, got through to CFL headquarters and placed Washington's name on the Riders' negotiation list. Washington, ineligible for the NFL and AFL, was happy to get a chance to play in the CFL, and it's history now that he became an instant star. But he might have been starring for the Lions or Tiger-Cats had Mote delayed his call by 30 minutes. Within an hour after he had made sure of CFL rights for Washington, Lions and Tiger-Cats both called to have Washington put on their negotiation list.

BILL WAKEHAM, along with Wayne Vollmer and other Canadians trying to get a tour card from the newly-formed Association of Professional Golfers, might be unable to enter the Canadian Open or play on the Canadian pro tour next season. It would happen if the APG and the Professional Golfers Association continue to be unable to settle their differences and the CPGA, as can be reasonably expected, goes along with the USPGA . . . Ottawa Rough Riders lost part of what they gained by getting Vic Washington when they allowed Dave Cramer to go to Calgary Stampede in the deal for Lovell Coleman. Cramer is a Canadian and perhaps the best rookie halfback in the Western Football Conference . . . George Schull, a Bronxville, N.Y., bus driver who averaged 162 with it last season recently presented what is believed to be the oldest temple ball in use to the National Bowling Museum. It was purchased by Schull's father in 1905 and carried a three-year guarantee. It was in 1905, incidentally, that the first hard rubber bowling ball was introduced. Balls previously were made of lignum vitae, a tropical wood of such high specific density that it cannot float . . . for horse-racing fans who keep asking about the possibility of fall racing returning to Sandown Park, about all that is known for certain is that a big majority of owners don't want to race at Sandown in the spring but the B.C. Jockey Club prefers it that way. Next game: Tonight — VICTORIA at Kelowna and New Westminster at Vernon. Monday — VICTORIA at Kelowna and New Westminster at Vernon.

Victoria Cougars gained a committee-room victory and a tie on the ice Saturday as they continued to make progress in their search for the B.C. Junior Hockey League championship.

Before playing to a 3-3 tie in the evening with Vernon Exos to assure retention of first place, the Cougars won the rights to centre Dave Cousins, who played last season with Kelowna Buckaroos.

Cousins, central figure in a "poaching" charge made against the Cougars by Scott Angus, manager of the Kelowna club, became Victoria property and was released to the Cougars after a telegraph vote by the B.C. Amateur Hockey Association following an appeal from Cousins on his suspension by the Kelowna club.

Announcement of his release was made after a BCJHL meeting in Penitence Saturday morning.

"No evidence was entered at the meeting to back up the poaching charge," Victoria manager Bob Reid said. "And there was no evidence that other Okanagan clubs were unduly upset about losing players to our club."

Cousins, who made the trip to the Okanagan with the Cougars, was in the lineup for the game against Vernon, playing between Dave Williams and Len Myles. He drew a penalty and played a steady defensive game.

While Cousins and his line failed to produce any points, point-sized Grant Evans continued to be the even-season scoring sensation.

Evans, who scored 25 goals, seven of them in one game for a league record, for Kamloops Rockets last season, fired in all three Victoria goals. They were his eighth, ninth and 10th scoring shots of the season and gave him 15 points for the four games the Cougars have played.

He scored his first two goals in the first period after Bob Mayer had given Exos the lead, then tied it with a power-play goal in the third period after the Vernon club had gone ahead with second-period goals by Lawrence Quachuck and Gerry Vachon.

TROUBLE IN SECOND

Cougars played a solid first period but got into trouble in the second period positionally and seemed headed for defeat before they righted themselves five minutes into the third period.

The Islanders took control in the last 10 minutes and only the standout play of Jack Gilroy, only holdover regular goal-keeper in the league, enabled Exos to get away with one point.

Gilroy stopped 48 shots, 18 in the last 20 minutes. At the other end, Ron Grahame came up with a steady effort to block 42 shots.

Salvage Tie

MIAMI (AP)—Ed Rutkowski threw a two-point conversion pass to Gary McDermott with eight seconds to go Saturday night as Buffalo Bills salvaged a 14-14 tie with Miami Dolphins in a tough American Football League defensive duel.

FIRST WOMAN

Mexican sprinter Enriqueta Basilio became the first woman to light the Olympic flame when she carried the torch around the track and up many stairs to the summit of the stadium on the last lap of its journey from Mount Olympus in Greece.

The ceremonial opening was the most heavily guarded in Olympic history, as the armed forces and the police were out in strength.

GLAMOROUS PARADE

After the huge five-ringed Olympic symbol made of inflated balloons was released, the world's most glamorous parade of athletes began. There are 108 nations represented here by 7,500 athletes.

First came Greece, according to tradition, as motherland of the Olympic Games. The Greeks were conservatively dressed grey slacks and blue jackets.

The entire team wore black shoes. There had been a threat that Negro athletes might blacken their shoes in protest.

Abelha Bibila, two-time winner of the marathon, carried the flag for the Ethiopian delegation, attired in white robes.

The French had one of the smartest-dressed teams in the parade, led by Christine Caron.

TORONTO — Toronto Argonauts regained first place in the Eastern Conference Saturday behind the passing of Wally Gahler, defeating B.C. Lions, 43-29, in an interlocking Canadian Football League game played before 22,373 fans.

Result left Argos one point ahead of Ottawa Rough Riders and two points ahead of Hamilton Tiger-Cats with the two pursuing clubs clashing today in Hamilton in a game which will bring a new leader or a first-place tie.

BROTHERS AT PFAN

With Paul Brothers giving them the best quarterbacking they have had this season and Ted Gerela kicking four field goals to set a CFL record of 23 for one season, the Lions put on their best offensive display of the season. But their defence team, which had been playing solid football, was riddled by Gahler and two ex-Lions, Bill Symons and Mel Profit.

Getting 226 yards in the air with Brothers completing 11 of 20 passes and another 160 yards on the ground with fullback Jim Evenson again a star, the Lions were in the game from the start until Al Ivin took a 13-yard pass from Gahler at 12:52 of the fourth quarter for the clinching touchdown.

Lions took a 7-0 lead, dropped behind by 7-14, and then kept threatening to overhaul the Argos. Argos were ahead by 14-8 after the first quarter, by 21-11 at half time and by 28-22 during the final 15 minutes.

However, each time the Lions got close, Gahler passed the Argos back into a safer lead. Gahler threw four touchdowns passes, two to Profit, one to Bobby Taylor and one to Ivin, and scored once himself on a one-yard plunge after a 44-yard pass to Ivin. Dave Mann converted each time and got a point on a punt.

SYMONS OUTSTANDING

Symons, Toronto's main running threat and a handy pass receiver as well, scored the first Argos touchdown on a 53-yard run.

Argos had 286 yards from passes and 175 along the ground in the wide-open game.

Gerela, who took the Western Conference scoring lead with a 15-point performance, booted field goals of 42, 47, 52 and 20 yards, got a point from a wide field-goal try from 33 yards and converted the touchdowns scored by Evenson and Lach Brown.

Lions' other points came early in the third quarter when Dick Fouts broke through to tackle Gahler in the end zone for a safety touch which brought the score to 16-21.

Evenson scored his touchdown on a five-yard plunge after a 45-yard pass to Sunny Hunter on the first B.C. sequence.

Then Symons broke loose for his long run and Profit took a 27-yard scoring pass from Gahler before Gerela completed first-quarter scoring with his field-goal miss.

Gerela booted field goals around a 34-yard touchdown reception by Taylor in the second quarter and the Lions led to 19-21 midway through the third quarter when Gerela got his 53-yarder after the safety touch.

But Gahler picked the Lion pass defence apart and Profit finished a 75-yard march with a 14-yard touchdown catch for 19-28. Gerela reduced it to 22-28 before the quarter ended with his 20-yarder but another passing barrage brought Gahler his touchdown early in the fourth quarter.

Mann's long punt brought it to 36-22 but the Lions had one more punch left, Brothers hitting Heron with a long pass which left him in the clear near mid-field. Heron went untouched the rest of the way for an 82-yard scoring play.

Again the Lion defence faltered and Gahler passed his way down the field for Ivin's clincher.

Bowling Roundup

Two International Groups Sponsor All Youth Bowling

By KING LEE

More than 400,000 under-19 tenpin bowlers took part in the American Junior Bowling Congress program in North America last season and more than 36,000 under-21 fivepin bowlers joined Youth Bowling Congress leagues. And the future looks even brighter for youngsters interested in both games.

These two organizations supervise almost all of the activities of young bowlers, from giving a six-year-old his or her first lesson on how to bowl to running national championships.

HONORABLE AIMS

AJBC, jointly sponsored by Women's International Bowling Congress and American Bowling Congress, and YBC, backed by the Bowling Proprietors' Association, are pledged to make bowling more interesting for young people and encourage adult bowlers to take a greater interest in youth bowling.

In Victoria, YBC supervisor Don Yuen reports that approximately 450 take part in the program at Town and Country, Gibsons, Esquimalt and Sooke's Rainbow Lanes. British Columbia boasts a membership of more than 6,500 YBC bowlers this season.

Besides learning the art of bowling, sportsmanship and etiquette is stressed during the Saturday morning leagues.

CANVASS PLANNED

This year's national YBC championship will be held in Hamilton, Ont., and, starting in about two weeks, youngsters will be canvassing door-to-door to sell chocolates for the Scholarship and Travel Fund. This fund is used to defray transportation costs and to set up $200 scholarships for worthy students who belong to YBC leagues.

Muriel Dodsworth and Joan Lumscombe work with the canvassers to 40 AJBC bowlers on Saturday mornings at Mayfair Lanes.

Esquimalt Bowladrome is holding a ladies' 20-game tournament on Sunday, Oct. 27, starting at 10 a.m. Entry fee is $20 with a maximum of 40 entries to be accepted. Highest average of 18 games or more as of Oct. 21 or, failing that, last year's highest average of 18 or more games will be used.

Start for Curling Rink

Another step in the development of Victoria Racquet Club was taken Saturday when Saanich mayor Hugh Curtis turned sod for a eight-sheet curling rink which is expected to be completed in January. Club members headed by vice-president Bert Matthews witnessed the ceremony.—(Robin Clarke)

Harry Welch is planning an Easter weekend tournament with a new car as the top prize. He is seeking Victoria Fivepin Association sanction for the tournament which will be open to Victoria area bowlers only who are registered in local leagues. Proposed format includes 225 scratch average and 80 percent handicap with the first five rounds to be bowled during league play and the last three elimination rounds to be rolled over Easter weekend.

PIN POINTS: Don Corbett topped the men's fivepin scores with 680 including 322 and 313 games... Jack Pined had a 334 single and 882 triple... Neil Parker rolled an 846 with a 331 best game at Esquimalt... Proud papa Bill Smith Jr. celebrated the arrival of daughter Lynda with a 835 series and 321 single. Ed Lewis and Bill McKay both spared headlines at Esquimalt while 18-year-old Mike Farley, bowling in the YBC League at Town and Country Lanes, spared a head-pin split... Paul Turcotte Don Shaw rolled a 249 game on the way to a fine 633 series... Andy McLeary gave Shaw a scare later on in the week with a 627 and 233 single... Ronnie McLaughlin rolled 607 with a 217... Max Uhl just missed 600 with 598... Uhl and Paul McMillan both rolled 225 Wednesday to tie for high single honors in Men's Commercial Tenpin League... League president Jack McLeary had eight straight strikes on the way to a 253 single in Mayfair's Friday Nite League... Bill Burke bowled a 241 single... Carol Goodson had a 212 game.

Wanderers Win On Early Lead
Oak Bay Wanderers jumped to a 6-0 half-time lead and hung on to edge University of Victoria Vikings, 9-4, in the only Victoria Rugby Union first division game Saturday played at Layritz Park.

Don Burgess kicked two penalty goals in the first half to give Wanderers the lead. Bob Hinson added a second half try. Jim Winman scored the only Vikings try and Ted Hardy scored on a drop kick and convert attempt.

In the second division, James Bay Athletic Association's two teams, Barbarians and Crusaders, played to a 13-13 tie at MacDonald Park and University of Victoria Norwegians beat Cowichan, 29-0, at Gordon Head.

Barbarians, who held a 13-0 half-time lead, received single tries from George Jones, Paul

Plante Blanks Los Angeles To Start Comeback in NHL

Jacques Plante last night made a great start in his attempt to show that he is still a National Hockey League goalkeeper.

Playing faultlessly, Plante, who will be 40 years old on Jan. 17 and who shares with Bill Durnan the record of being named the Vezina Trophy winner six times, turned aside 24 shots as St. Louis Blues opened their campaign at home with a 6-0 rout of Los Angeles Kings.

PENGUINS TIE CANADIENS
In last night's other game, Montreal Canadiens opened defence of their Eastern Division championship by playing to a 1-1 tie with the Penguins before a record opening crowd in Pittsburgh—10,781 fans.

Playing their second game in two nights, the Blues still had too much for the Kings.

The St. Louis club made things easier for Plante to get his 64th NHL shutout by giving him a 2-0 first-period lead on power-play goals by Red Berenson and Gary Sabourin.

EASY RAILING
It was easy sailing from there for the Blues, who got promising performances from two other veteran acquisitions.

Camille Henry, heading for his 36th birthday, boosted the lead to 3-0 in the second period and 32-year-old Ab McDonald, obtained from Pittsburgh, scored the last two goals in the third period.

Craig Cameron got the other St. Louis goal, scoring late in the second period.

In Pittsburgh, the determined Penguins checked persistently to stop the Canadiens from mounting much in the way of sustained attacks and got a brilliant goalkeeping performance from Les Binkley.

Binkley, dripping blood at the end of the game after a 14-stitch cut suffered in a practice scrawl had been reopened in a goal-mouth scramble, stopped 35 shots and was unbeatable after a goal by Gilles Tremblay after only 79 seconds.

Vancouver Players Join Up

Robert Price and Associates is bringing two cast members of a recent Vancouver production of The Homecoming, to the show in Victoria.

The Harold Pinter play, at the end of this month, will use only one Victoria actor, Owen Foran, who has played in Black Comedy, Lav. Roar of the Greasepaint and The Odd Couple for RPA.

The rest of the cast comes from Vancouver.

Lillian Carlson will repeat her role as Ruth, the only woman in the play, which she did at Frederick Wood Theatre several weeks ago.

Robert Clothier, who played the father, Max, in the Vancouver production, will play his cab-driving brother Sam at the McPherson.

Mr. Foran will play Max in the RPA show.

Others in the cast are Roger Norman who plays Joey, Eric Schneider as Lenny, and Peter Howarth as Teddy.

The show is directed by Peter Brockington from Vancouver.

The Killing of Sister George, Nov. 14 to 23, will be directed by Tim Bond, who will arrive in Victoria in a few days from England.

He has been working at Palace Court Theatre, Burnsmouth, England, with Richard Digby Day.

Mr. Digby Day was in Victoria several summers ago to work with University of Victoria, "directing" Teeth Night.

Mr. Bond is holder of a Ford Scholarship in performance arts, and has received two Canada Council grants.

ing arts, and has received two Canada Council grants.

He worked as assistant to Michael Langham at Stratford.

The Killing of Sister George by Frank Marcus tells the intimate and shocking private life of a national soap opera idol.

It has been described as a bitterly funny look into the heart of an actress.

In England, Mr. Bond directed Look, a production which is being considered by RPA for production at the McPherson in January.

Two factors about early-season attendance have encouraged RPA.

One is that an increasing number of young people are buying tickets to see the company's shows.

Another is a survey taken of ticket-holders, which showed almost all were enthusiastic about the season-opener, Black Comedy.

Harry Hill directed Black Comedy for the company.

After The Homecoming and The Killing of Sister George, the company will go on an all-out ramp with The Mad Show, based on Mad Magazine.

Pope Blesses Games

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Pope Paul blessed the 1968 Olympic Games in Mexico City Saturday night and urged the athletes to be good sportsmen and "apostles of peace."

"Your task," said the Pope, "is to contribute in changing battlefields into gymnasia, in replacing hate with love."

His speech was carried over Vatican Radio in a linkup with the radio network in Mexico City.

Referendum His Topic

Hospital consultant A. W. E. Pridemore will speak in support of the Oct. 26 hospital referendum at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Strathcona Hotel.

held at the Bastion Theatre Studio on Hastings Tuesday.
Judges Rebe Eversfield,
Harry Hill, John Dunbar, Alan
Purdy and Helen Simpson-Bailey will pick 30 acts from among the applicants for the show.

There are two classes in the contest—under 25 and over 25.
Prizes in each class are $25.25 and $20.

This season Jerry Gouley will not appear in the show. He is busy producing and directing.
He will appear in the Bastion Theatre musical Cinderella for six Saturday matinee performances starting Oct. 26. He will play the Damsel.

He is also busy preparing material for conventions and Christmas party dates.

SUK DUO
The Suk Duo will be here for a brief visit and a concert
Monday at 8 p.m. at the University of Victoria. Violinist Josef Suk will appear with pianist Alfred Holcek.

This program will be offered in the auditorium of the McLaurin Building. Future offerings in the eight-concert series include a recital by the British husband-and-wife team of Winifred Roberts, violin, and Geraint Jones, harpichord.
Later on in the series the Brodin Quartet from Russia will perform.

SAME PLACE

This could be nostalgia week for city fans-seekers. The Pig and Whistle Show plays Memorial Arena Monday and the British Variety Show follows at the same place Wednesday.

The Pig and Whistle Show has a large following as a result of regular TV exposure and the Carlton Show Band has made a number of records for RCA Victor.

Host at the Pig and Whistle is John Hower who commutes to Toronto from London monthly to tape shows.

SENSELESS MARE
Mr. Hower plays host at the pub and makes the guests feel at home. He also introduces the acts. The Pig and Whistle comes complete with a singing barronaid in Kory Turner.

It will be interesting to see if the British Variety Show draws as well as the Scottish show.

The cast looks good. It includes the wartime favorite Anne Shelton, pianist Mrs. Mills and recording star David Whitfield.

Comedy comes from Billy
Moore, who also plays the banjo, and Billy Dainty. Others on the bill include Jamie James on trumpet and June Peters, a violinist-singer.

It could be quite a week.

GUITAR GAL
Lyette Denis and her guitar are here from Joliet, Que. Miss Denis sang in Vancouver recently after filling engagements at La Cabestrera, La Chamberlain and Le Tambourin in Montreal.

She sings French and English folk songs and modern French ballads. She can be heard nightly at Rose-Marie Cordon's Coeq au Vin in Bastion Square.

LIVING COST RISES

Accused Man Loses Bid To Halt Strangler Film

BOSTON (A.P.) — The premiere of the film The Boston Strangler will open on schedule in New York Oct. 16.

Albert DeSalvo, 37, identified by his former lawyer and two psychiatrists as the strangler, lost a court suit Friday to

He said the film was harmful to his image.

Judge Arthur Garrity viewed said it was "a responsible treat-problem." DeSalvo had charged the movie distorted his life and would reduce his chances of eventually gaining his freedom.

Garden Notes

Too Tough to Eat

By M. V. CHESNUT

SQUAW CORN (A.V., Victoria)—I am not surprised you found your squaw corn poor eating; it is pretty tough compared to modern "sweet corn" varieties, and even the Indians didn't try to eat it straight from the cob, but dried the kernels and pounded them into corn meal.

Squaw corn is grown principally for its ornamental value, as the cobs are variegated, with kernels in purple, mauve, yellow, cream and black, very striking in Thanksgiving and Harvest Home displays and arrangements, particularly when combined with ornamental gourds.

For this purpose the ears are left on the plant until they are quite hard and dry. No preservative of any kind is needed; these multi-colored cobs will keep indefinitely if thoroughly ripe and bone-dry.

SICK AFRICAN VIOLET (E.W., Ladysmith)—The sick, brown leaves on your African violet and the fact that the plant is growing "high on the stem" suggest a soil-borne fungus disease.

The simple way to handle such infections is to dump the plant and soil in the incinerator and soak the pot in strong household disinfectant.

However, if it is a valued plant and worth the trouble of prolonged nursing care, you could try the following treatment:

First, pick off and burn all leaves showing any signs of ill health. Uproot the plant, remove the soil, and cut away all the roots close up under the crown. You now have a simple rosette of leaves radiating out from the central crown, and only a short stump where the roots were amputated.

Set the plant on a glass of water with the water just touching the root stump and leave until new roots have formed in the water, then repot. Keep the plant in quarantine, well away from other plants, until you see how the treatment works.

RUSSIAN OLIVE (A.M.H., Falkland Harbor)—Your thorny shrub with the willow-like silvery leaves is the Russian olive, botanically Elaeagnus angustifolia, and sometimes called Oleaster or Trebizond Date, although it is not related to either the olive or the date.

It is a native of Western Asia and can be trained either as a singlestemmed tree, reaching a height of about 20 feet, or as a somewhat shorter many-stemmed shrub. The plant prefers partial shade, rather dry soil and a position in full sun.

The Russian olive is valued for its fine form and ornamental foliage rather than for its blossoms, which are inconspicuous. The fruits are supposed to be edible, or at least good for jelly, but I have never tried them. Come to think of it, I don't recall ever seeing this plant in fruit.

SNAPDRAGON CABBAGE (P.H.R., Victoria)—While the snapdragons are actually a perennial and capable of surviving the winter to bloom again, it is better to pull up your plants at the end of the growing season and consign them to the incinerator or the garden bonfire.

Not only do second-year snapdragons become leggy and woody and somewhat sparse of bloom, but they are very much more susceptible to rust disease than vigorous first-year plants grown from seed.

Quite often these elderly snaps act like a typhoid Mary, spreading rust to other plants in the garden. Even the so-called rust-resistant varieties can be carriers.

ART BUCHWALD Explains the Merger Game

Conglomerates Are 'In'

WASHINGTON — Almost every day you pick up the newspaper, some company is merging with another company. The average person has no idea what is happening, but it could eventually affect everybody.

What it boils down to is that if you merge an apple company with another apple company, you're creating the anti-trust laws.

But if you merge an apple company with a banana company, then you're building a conglomerate; and whether you know it or not, conglomerates are the "in" things to own.

This is how conglomerates work.

Let us say that Dalinsky's drug store in Georgetown decides to merge with Fichetti's meat market in Bethesda, Md. Since neither Dalinsky nor Fichetti can agree on whose name to use, they call the company The Great American Drug and Meat Company.

They issue stock and it is immediately sold out, because any company that has the words "great," "American," "drug" and "meat" in it must have potential.

Now, with the stock from their company, they make a bid to take over the Aetna Casualty Company, offering Aetna stockholders one share of GADAM for every two shares of Aetna.

Once the deal is completed they go to the bank and borrow $500,000 on the Aetna Casualty Company to buy the Markay Life Insurance Company.

Then, using the money in the Markay Life Insurance Company, they make a bid on the Mary Smith Pie and Bakery Company, offering one and a half shares of Markay for one and two-thirds shares of Mary Smith.

It turns out that Mary Smith Pie and Bakery has a $3,000,000 surplus cash flow, so Dalinsky and Fichetti use this cash flow to buy the Carey Winston Life Preserver Company, which in spite of its name specializes in the building of Nile Missiles.

With government contracts from the Carey Winston Life Preserver Company as collateral, GADAM buys the Washington Green Sox baseball team, which it merges with the Norfolk Warriors, a basketball team that loses money but can come in handy to write off the profits of a TV station that GADAM is bidding on in Winnipeg.

With these companies as a nucleus Dalinsky and Fichetti decide to make more acquisitions, because as Dalinsky tells a Time magazine reporter who is doing a cover story on him titled the Boy Wonder of Georgetown, "if you stand still you die."

The next step for GADAM is to go to the First Citizen's Bank of Wesley Heights and borrow $30,000,000 against the stock. With the money Dalinsky and Fichetti buy the Second Citizens Bank of Culpepper, and then use the stock to purchase the First Citizens Bank of Wesley Heights.

From there it is only a matter of time before GADAM starts a mutual fund, a fried chicken franchise company, a Puerto Rican rum plant and a senior citizens apartment complex in Fairbanks, Alaska.

In less than three years Dalinsky, who put up $30, and Fichetti, who put up $35, control $3,000,000,000 worth of business and are each worth on paper $50,000,000.

The only danger is that if either Dalinsky's drug store or Fichetti's meat market lose the lease on its store the whole conglomerate pyramid could fall down.

When you get right down to it, that's the only part of their business that Dalinsky and Fichetti understand.

SHEILAH GRAHAM

HOLLYWOOD (NANA) — Candy Bergen and Doris Day's own Terry are trying to figure a way of getting married and being able to stay together. All of Candy's films these days take her to Europe — she is now in Rome starring in The Adventurers and Terry works in Hollywood. The simple solution is for Candy to give up her career, and I think she will — one of these days.

It is now official. Topel, the Israeli actor who starred in the London stage version of Fiddlers on the Roof, will do the film version, too. Norman Jewison directs.

Donald Weaver, who would have been a millionaire many times over if he had stayed with the Gunsmoke series, will make a movie with Marshall Dillon's real-life brother, Peter Givens. Five-man Army. January in Spain. Jim Aronson, by the way, fought fiercely against doing Gunsmoke, and had to be convinced by John Wayne. It was in the very early '50s and actors were leery of TV.

Joan Allen and her husband Glenn Maxwell came up from New York to housewife with Carolyn Jones and later confided that she is anxious to resume her career in films. Joan was a big star in the days when she was dating with Van Johnson. I met her the first day she arrived from her musical in New York. She was bouncy and bubbly. She still is.

Fred MacMurray staged a western-style brunch with croissants during the sale of 100 of his pure-bred Angus on his ranch in northern California. He expected 200 guests.

Eight hundred showed, however. There were a lot of women who couldn't care less about cattle but who wanted to meet Fred.

The "laugh-in" boys have their work paper trimmed to cope with Lucille Ball's new show. Lucille is determined to beat the competition and in addition to her own kids she is signing a slew of guest stars — Carol Burnett — everyone is after Carol — Jimmy Stewart, Tennessee Ernie Ford, etc. Behind all that fooling, Madame Ball is just about the most determined woman in Hollywood. I'd hate to be the opposition.

Joan Dalrymple has written a book, Your Career and Opportunities in the Theatre. Joan who brilliantly put on My Fair Lady, Carousel, South Pacific, etc. at the City Centre in New York with the lowest budgets in the theatre, was telling me of a conversation she had one time with the late Bernard Shaw about money. "There's an enormous difference between having no money and some money," Shaw said, "but there's no difference between having some money and a lot of money."

The daughter of the late Gertrude Lawrence, Pamela Chantworthy, will be among those present in New York for the premiere of Star in which Julie Andrews plays the great star. This time, 20th Century-Fox believes that Julie will also be present. She was conspicuous by her absence at the London premiere and some of the reporters were very miffed.

Police Empathize

SYDNEY HARRIS

At a meeting of police officers in Chicago last month, Chief Fred Ferguson of the small California town of Corona, told his colleagues about putting into practice the "empathy approach."

In training his 44-man police department, Chief Ferguson has them booked in jail as suspects, walking picket lines and living on Skid Row—in order to get a feeling of the way the disadvantaged and the disasters are treated by the law.

In one case, he reported, two "winos" walking along the Los Angeles Skid Row turned into a parking lot and shared a drink from a bottle one had pulled from his pocket. Two uniformed cops appeared, spread-eagled the winos against a wall and searched them.

One of them, paunching and afraid of the treatment he might receive, blurted out his true identity—a policeman from suburban Corona, assigned as part of his training to play the role of a wino.

I can't imagine a more important aspect of modern police training, especially in the increasingly urbanized areas. The need for police to "empathize" with the poor, the foreign-speaking, the uneducated, the minority groups of all kinds, has never been more pressing.

It is easy to blame the police or the slum dwellers, or both, for the civil war that rages sporadically in such U.S. neighborhoods. But the fact remains that both are the victims of something bigger than themselves—the technology that has eliminated face-to-face and face-to-face contact between the police and the inhabitants of such areas.

Police used to walk through the worst slum sections of New York and Boston and other cities without fear of attack or even taunting. They knew everyone on their few blocks, and could easily separate the sheep from the goats.

Nowadays, they confront just a faceless mass, staring back at them balefully, suspiciously and contemptuously—because slum-dwellers know they are all considered an equal threat and menace to the police, who have neither the time nor the facilities to distinguish among them.

If it is too late—and I suspect it is—to bring back the cop on the beat, Corona is doing the next best thing, in giving its policemen first-hand experience at being on the other side of the shield, the stick and the gun.

Strangeness begets fear, and fear begets force. When the police begin to understand the needs, the feelings and the response of the "enemy," they might find they have more friends than foes in that no-man's-land they now patrol so warily.

Commitment Wanted Now

Peninsula Fears Loss Of Hospital Facility

By NANCY BROWN

Saanich Peninsula council fear their bid for a replacement for Rest Haven Hospital will be squelched by the larger municipalities unless a specific commitment is made before the Oct. 26 hospital referendum.

North Saanich Ald. Trevor Davis, who expressed the fear Saturday, was chairman of a joint inter-municipal and Chamber of Commerce committee which gained ratepayer support recently when it asked Health Minister Ralph Lofmark and the Regional Board for the commitment.

"It has been said that we should endorse the hospital expenditures immediately and leave the political fighting for later," he said. "But later can be too late for the peninsula."

"Right now we have a school referendum before us in Saanich for school construction. Every mile, and every detail of expenditure in school construction and classrooms has been spelled out for us right down to the last $1,000."

"That is how it should be. The taxpayer should know how his money will be spent," said Ald. Davis.

Unless a replacement for Rest Haven is built under the upcoming program, Ald Davis feels it will be many years before there can be further hospital construction in the peninsula.

"The Oct. 26 referendum will only account for a fraction of hospital construction," he said. "It will cost the taxpayer about one mill, but the entire program will cost five mills."

"I think it would have been better to have spelled out the whole thing for the taxpayer and realize that he is responsible enough to recognize the needs when they are honestly presented," said Ald. Davis.

"I wonder how many people realize the full extent of the cost of the program?" he asked.

The essence of the present vote is a needed 600 extended-care beds which will cost about $20,000 apiece. The next step will be 1,000 acute care beds in separate facilities to cost close to $30,000 each.

"It seems reasonable to expect a five mill cost which will take about 20 years to pay for," he said. "This is why the northern municipalities want to make sure that when the money is spent there is something to show for it in the peninsula."

Ald. Davis said if the hospital board will not make a commitment he hopes that Health Minister Lofmark will step in and make a commitment for the board.

Navy Court Rejects Plea for Dismissal

By DON GAIN

Inexperience and "perhaps misconduct" on the part of others played their part in the grounding of the Esquimalt-based destroyer-escort HMCS Saskatchewan the morning of Sept. 8, the defending officer suggested Saturday in a plea to have three charges against the ship's captain dismissed.

The plea from Cmdr. J. L. Henderson of the office of the Judge Advocate General, Ottawa, came at the end of the case for the prosecution, put by Major D. W. Ward of the office of the Deputy Judge Advocate, Winnipeg.

The plea was denied by Cmdr. R. C. Ferne of the office of the Judge Advocate General, Ottawa, who is judge advocate in the court martial of Cmdr. Norman Jackson, captain of the Saskatchewan.

Cmdr. Jackson has pleaded not guilty to three charges of negligence at the court martial which goes into its fifth day at 9 a.m. Tuesday in CFB Esquimalt wardroom.

NO EVIDENCE

Cmdr. Henderson contended that the prosecution failed to produce evidence to substantiate the charges.

As part of his argument, he said Saskatchewan's captain lost his executive officer, his navigation officer and two watchkeepers, because the ship was heading into a major reef and personnel were being transferred out of the ship.

"This left a 'very heavy burden' on the captain of the ship," he said. "But the commanding officer can't personally pilot the ship. He can't do it single-handed."

LITTLE SUPPORT

Cmdr. Jackson received little support around 1100 hours Sept. 8," he said. "The reason, I suggest, was the result of inexperience and unfamiliarity because of these charges, and perhaps misconduct in all the people he had to place confidence in for his command."

The defending officer did not elaborate on his suggestion of "misconduct."

NOT BEEN TOLD

And he said reports from the operator of the echosounder, who found the ship was in shallower and shallower water, never reached the captain.

The first defence witness was Capt. C. G. Pratt, commander of the Fifth Canadian Escort Squadron, Halifax.

Cmdr. Pratt, who was accepted by the court martial as an expert navigator, with area, said he didn't think a blind passage plan was necessary for Active Pass.

He said he had heard of only one instance of the pass being navigated blind in a navy ship, that usually conditions were better in the pass than outside, and that fogbanks at the entrance to Active Pass were "unusual."

He based his testimony on his service in coastal ships when, as a youth, he went through the pass every day for 18 months, and on his subsequent naval service in local waters.

AVERAGE OFFICER

Asked by the prosecutor his assessment of the adequacy of supervision by Cmdr. Jackson, Pratt said that "trying to put it into the frame of an average commanding officer in the fleet, I wouldn't have expected one of my commanding officers to do more."

He testified that the Saskatchewan, in his opinion, was doing everything necessary and was following correct procedure.

"QUITE HAPPY"

He said he was "quite happy" with the speed of 18 knots and pointed out that, at that speed, the effect of tides on the destroyer-escort would be less.

On several points he said he hesitated to give an opinion because it would be "a matter of judgment at the time."

At the morning sitting, a navigation expert from Winnipeg testified that the Saskatchewan's entrance to Active Pass had "two unsatisfactory aspects."

ON PORT SIDE

Capt. Andrew Collier, former captain of HMCS Skeena and now deputy chief of staff at Maritime Training Command, Winnipeg, said Saskatchewan's planned track cut across the entrance and would have put it on the port side of the pass, where it might encounter ships coming out.

He said the plan was "well prepared" out of Vancouver and was "perfectly satisfactory" across the strait, but the portion into Active Pass was "not prepared at all."

He criticized the lack of dead-reckoning positions and the lack of "any future track."

NO RECORD

He said there was no record of any transfer of position lines from one particular chart to another, and said the first fix at 19.41 a.m. was "not a very good one."

"I'm not to happy with its accuracy," he said. "I don't know what happened or why the ship was so far to port of track."

On the sounding of fog apparatus, he said, it was required by the rules of the road that a ship should sound its horn if it could not stop within half the distance to the obscured area.

"You should start signals before you go into fog," the captain said.

Questioned on the speed of the ship, he said that with all circumstances "in your favor, a speed of 18 to 20 knots is no problem."

The question of manoeuvring ity came into it, he said. The ship should be going at "not less than 12 knots," and in good visibility "at not less than 15 knots, because you'd not have adequate control of the ship otherwise."

Sentencing Oct. 25

Man Declared Guilty Of Armed Robbery

After a three-hour summation of evidence by Mr. Justice J. S. Adams Saturday, a B.C. Supreme Court jury here declared Peter Simpson, 22, of Toronto, guilty of armed robbery and theft of an automobile.

The six-day trial ended Saturday evening when the jury decided, after 30 minutes deliberation, that the charge of breaking and entering the home of Monty Aldous, 4590 Summer Place, was not justified, but that the accusation of holding up Ernie's Fine Foods, 1616 Hillside, was valid.

ALL CHARGES

The jury also found the accused guilty of the theft of an automobile owned by Mr. Aldous' stepson Melvin Butler.

All charges arose out of an incident on May 11 when Equilmalt Constable Peter Doherty pursued a car along Craigflower Road and the Old Island Highway to View Royal.

Constable Doherty testified that the three men in the automobile increased speed to a high rate before crashing into a tree.

Robert Rickward, 28, died almost immediately in the crash and Roger McEwan, 22, died later in the day. Simpson suffered a broken foot and ankle, and head injuries.

SHORTLY AFTER

The accident occurred about half an hour after a holdup at Ernie's Fine Foods, in which $138 was taken.

Because of the fact that evidence for the crown, represented by Louis Lindholm and David Wilson, was mainly circumstantial, Mr. Justice Adams has been meticulous in his handling of the case and his charge to the jury Saturday was exhaustive.

He warned them at length about the validity of direct as opposed to circumstantial evidence, and what they must and must not rely upon in arriving at judgments.

He described it as a "long and intricate case," in which some aspects of crown evidence were tenuous.

He stressed that most of the rules of evidence in court procedure had been called into use because there had been no absolute recognition of the three men who were alleged to have entered Ernie's Fine Foods and taken money from the till.

TRIAL AID
Frequently during the trial, Mr. Justice Adams offered guidance to defence counsel David Skilling. Mr. Skilling expressed his appreciation of the co-operation from the bench.

Mr. Adams said Saturday he would bring down a decision on sentence Oct. 25, after receiving a probation report on the accused.

They were loaded aboard freighter at Baltimore, Maryland.—(Jim Ryan)

Dentists Not All Striking

Welfare Minister Dan Campbell said Saturday he feels it is unlikely that the dental profession as a whole is a party to the current withdrawal of services from welfare patients.

"It is one thing while negotiations are going on to put the gun to the head of the minister, and it is quite another matter to put the gun to the head of youngsters and old age pensioners who are in need of dental service," he said.

Mr. Campbell urged dentists to reconsider their present action.

WRITE DIRECT

"In addition, I would ask any individual who is a client of this department having any experience with the withdrawal of service to write me direct with the circumstances," he said. "If we are, in fact, in a strike situation, we might as well know it."

He was commenting on a story in Saturday's Colonist about welfare and foster children caught in the middle of negotiations between the provincial government and dentists.

EMERGENCY ONLY

The B.C. Dentists Association announced a withdrawal of services for all but emergency care June 30 to support negotiations which they said had been going on for a year.

They are asking for 30 per cent of their fee schedule for care to be paid for by the welfare department, which would put them on a par with the medical profession.

They now receive 57 per cent of their fee schedule.

Mr. Campbell said the number of complaints being received in the department indicates that in a very organized way there is in effect a withdrawal of services from both young and old clients of the welfare department.

NEGOTIATING

"Over the past few months," he said, "the department has in fact been meeting with the dental profession and it is alarming that while these negotiations are going on, individual dentists are obviously, in effect, on strike."

Mr. Campbell said the department has increased the rates for dentures but other negotiations have been lengthy because the dental profession does not have the kind of internal machinery to promote an agreement similar to that of the medical profession.

The B.C. government, he said, wants the profession to prepare the ground administratively for Denticare.

SAME LIAISON

He stressed that the province is not willing to put in its own scheme but wants to be prepared if dental benefits are added to the existing Canadian Medicare scheme.

Mr. Campbell said the government is anxious to put the dental profession into the same kind of professional liaison as the medical profession.

"The public should understand," he said, "that the dental profession has not, up to this point, been organized in such a way as to look after such problems as over-utilization by either the patient or the dentists, which is a fundamental prerequisite to any scheme of denticare."

Matter of Taste

Age-old mushroom problem of either toxic or harmless is pondered by University of Victoria steno-grapher May Lambert after mushroom bonanza was discovered on campus. Shipyard Workers Ratify Agreement Shipyard workers at Yarrow's Ltd. in Victoria and Burrard Dry Dock in North Vancouver have ratified a two-year agreement that provides a 14-per-cent wage increase.

Some 800 workers are affected. They earned from $1.02 to $1.70 an hour under the old contract. They failed in their attempt to win reduction of the work day from eight to 7½ hours and a 12½-per-cent wage hike in a one-year contract.

Fringe benefit improvements include double time for all overtime, and Easter Monday as a 10th statutory holiday.

Cove supplies the ferries at Swartz Bay and has good pressure.

While agreeing to install a fire hydrant on their line close to North Saanich secondary school, they would not agree to provide an interconnection to give greater pressure to fight fires at the school or Rest Haven Hospital.

Chairman E. W. W. Clowes said in a letter to North Saanich council "You will no doubt understand that we cannot contemplate with equanimity the prospect of freely feeding our rather expensively purchased water into Sidney mains."

The trustees feared that once the valve connecting the two supplies was opened for an emergency it may not be shut off again.

The request was made after the provincial fire marshal found poor pressure on the spring-fed Sidney water mains near the school and hospital at the end of the Sidney supply lines.

A parallel line from Deep Cove supplies the ferries at Swartz Bay and has good pressure.

The North Saanich fire department has long been a bone of contention between Sidney and North Saanich, serving both areas and operated by a joint fire committee.

The councils have not yet settled a dispute over ownership of the assets of the department, with Sidney wanting equal ownership as it pays part of the costs, while North Saanich awaits a concrete proposal dealing with liabilities as well as assets and points out that a municipality is not empowered to disperse the people's assets.

When the waterworks letter was discussed by North Saanich council, Mayor Cummings said he did not feel council could discriminate as to whose life can be saved in the event of a fire.

He suggested a metered valve on an interconnection, with council, if necessary, guaranteeing to pay for water used.

Council agreed to a proposal to pay for a meter, and the proposal will be considered by the fire committee and the waterworks trustees.

Water Request 'Disturbing'

The "equanimity" of Deep Cove Waterworks trustees was disturbed when North Saanich Mayor J. B. Cummings asked them to interconnect their supply with Sidney's to provide greater pressure for emergency fire fighting.

Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: I am 20 years old, in my second year at college and I am the only virgin in our crowd. I date a lot but never seem to get asked out more than three or four dates. When I say "no" they don't call me any more.

Now I've met a guy who intrigues me. He is the only fellow I've ever dated that I would like to marry. We've gone out together four times and he hasn't asked me to go to bed yet but I have a hunch the question will come up soon. Do you believe that if he does ask me, he is not the hero I've been waiting for? Should I say "yes" and take a chance that he won't drop me? Should I say "no" and hope he will respect me? — A

High Grades, Standards

Dear Ann Landers: I am 19, a sophomore in a midwestern university and considered good-looking and reasonably bright by my peers. I've been dating since I was 15 and, with boasting, I can truthfully say I've had more than my share of male attention.

All through high school I maintained top grades and top moral standards. Without being a Touch-Not and wearing by purity like a medal, I conveyed the message that I was not available as an outlet for male sexual aggression. A

Willpower Vanishes

For some mysterious reason all my willpower and good intentions vanished and I GAVE IN. I told myself "this is love. Why should I deny him a true expression of my feelings?"

He sent a few postcards along the way but did not telephone me as I had hoped he would. Last night he returned — a changed man. He took me to supper and informed me that it would probably be our last date. These were his words: "You are not the girl I had hoped you were. Our last night together was a nightmare. You made me ashamed of myself. I could never marry you after that. I would always wonder if there had been others. This has been the greatest disappointment of my life."

So there's my story, Ann. I am trying to keep my chin up but it isn't easy. I tell myself no decent man would treat a girl this way, but deep down I know it was my decision, not his — and all the rationalization in the world doesn't make it right. — YESTERDAY'S FOOL.

Women's Image Changing

Work Beyond Jam, Jelly

By TRUDY KEMP

"Our image must be changed," Mrs. Aroli Dutt of India, international president of the Associated Country Women of the World, told some 150 Vancouver Island members of the Women's Institute.

She explained that many people still have the wrong impression of the work done by the women's institutes throughout the world.

"We must not let them think we are just little old ladies who make jams and jellies for sale," she continued.

Mrs. Dutt was special guest at a tea and reception given Saturday in the Red Lion Motor Inn by the provincial agriculture department. Prior to the reception she was honored at a luncheon given by the WI executives, including officers from both South Island and North Island Institutes.

The guest speaker pointed out that the ACWW represents rural women and homemakers in 65 countries in six continents of the world, and has 270 member societies (including the Women's Institutes of Canada) with a total membership of more than 6,500,000 women.

She pointed out that all member societies are non-political and non-sectarian. They are voluntary organizations free to run their own affairs according to the community needs of their state or country, but contributing their experience towards the common good of rural women and homemakers everywhere.

Members of the ACWW work together to promote international friendship and understanding. With this in mind international and area conferences are held and also seminars for women leaders.

Other means of promoting friendship and understanding are the ACWW's official organ The Countrywoman, and the "letter friend" scheme which has widened the horizons for more than 50,000 women.

To raise the standard of living for rural women everywhere is another aim of the ACWW. This is being done partly through community efforts within member societies and also through the Lady Aberdeen Scholarship scheme.

Named for a founder of ACWW, a Scottish social worker, the scholarship, which has a capital fund of $60,000, promotes the training of women leaders in nutrition, child care, homecraft, citizenship, literacy and crafts for leisure and profit.

Other methods to help raise the standard of living for rural women include ACWW training schemes such as the three-year project in West Bengal involving 18 villages, which Mrs. Dutt was largely responsible in starting; and assistance to leadership training projects in Rhodesia and Kenya.

Seminars for leadership training and, or, literacy programs have also been held in Colombo, Sarawak, Melbourne, Sydney, Dublin, Rome and Karachi.

The international president explained that funds for administration, extension, and publicity are provided by "pennies for friendship" to which members make voluntary donations. In the year ended March 31, 1968, the total income of $89,629 the sum $38,528 was provided by the "pennies for friendship" fund.

She outlined some of the work being carried on by ACWW members in rural areas in Africa and in her own country, India.

Teaching the women in these areas to read and write is one important project and in many cases in India this has inspired the husbands to go to night school.

"How could they remain illiterate once their wives knew how to read and write?" "We have to patient," she said, referring to problems and occasional setbacks in this work.

"It is important for all of us to remember that we have to work with them, not for them."

She further explained the importance of teaching them "self-help," and said ACWW believes in the motto:

"Give a man a fish, you feed him for a day. Teach him how to fish and you feed him for a lifetime."

"We believe we can help the next generation, the future of the world, by teaching the mothers," she concluded.

Mrs. Dutt was first elected world president of ACWW at the 11th triennial conference in Dublin, 1965, and was re-elected at the 12th triennial held in East Lansing, Mich., last month.

Prior to attending the conference she attended a meeting of the presidents of Women's International Non-Governmental Organizations in Geneva, and then toured the eastern Canadian provinces. Following the conference in East Lansing she returned to Canada and visited Women's Institutes in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia, starting at Fort St. John earlier this week.

She left for Vancouver immediately following the Victoria meeting and was a guest of honor at a reception in the mainland city. She leaves today for her home in Calcutta.

Mrs. Dutt, the daughter of a member of parliament, travelled as a child to various parts of India with her parents.

After her marriage at 18, she attended Calcutta University and graduated with honors in philosophy. Receiving a fellowship from the Dutch government, she studied social welfare policy for low income countries at the International Social Studies at The Hague from 1956 to 1959.

Mrs. Dutt has also held the post of secretary at the Saroj Nalini Industrial School and Teachers' Training College in Corridor becomes TV room in overcrowded hospital

Jammed wheelchairs take more sunroom space than patients do

$9,300,000 bylaw

Mount St. Mary epitomizes area's needs

By DESMOND BILL

Mount St. Mary Hospital is crowded and unsafe and for its 129 patients is likely to be their last home—but they still think they are lucky to be admitted to it.

In a way, it epitomizes the state of hospital services in the capital region. Patients receive excellent care, once admitted to hospital.

But there isn't enough room for all of them, and the existing facilities are badly in need of replacement.

The only hope of changing the situation is by passage of the $9,300,000 hospital building bylaw Oct. 26.

If it does not receive approval from 50 per cent of the voters, then conditions will remain unchanged at places such as Mount St. Mary Hospital.

This is what the hospital is like:

Wherever you walk, you see patients. They sit in wheelchairs in corridors because there is no room in which they can all be together.

There are sunrooms on each of the hospital's three floors, but they are usually packed. Some of the space is taken up with wheelchairs because there is no place to store them when not in use.

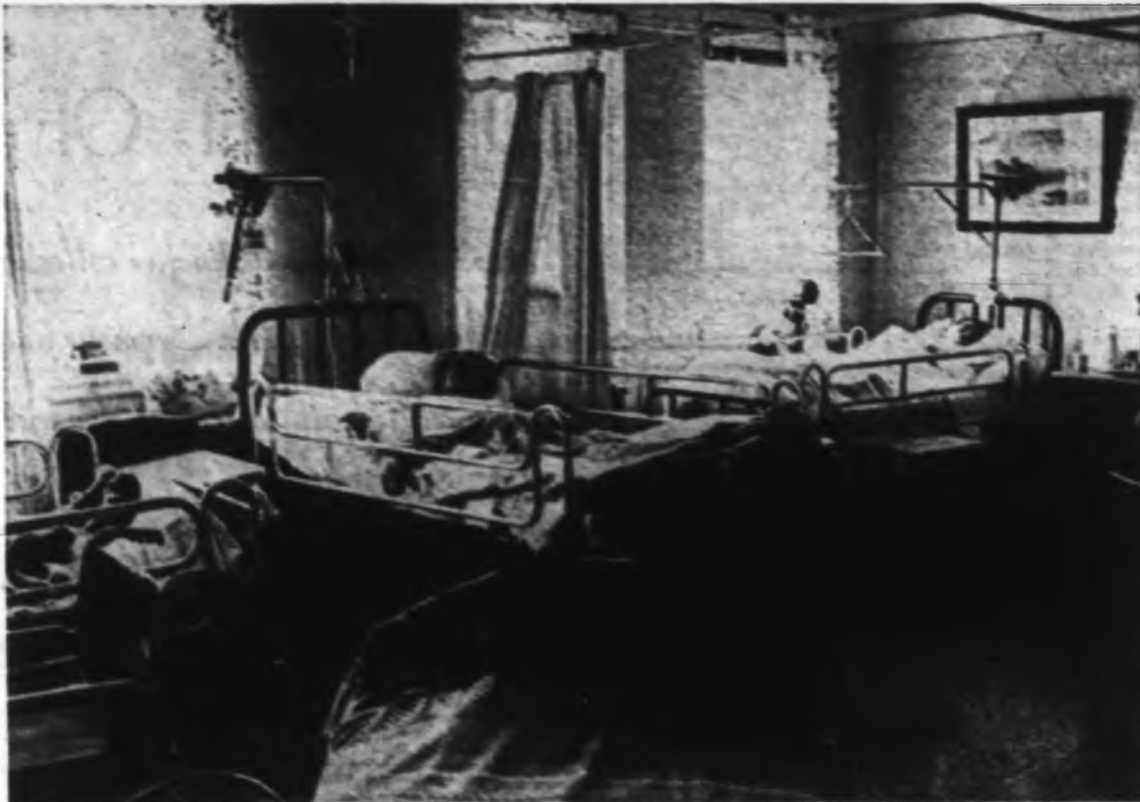

The rooms are small, cluttered with the possessions of their occupants. Sister Mary Justinian, hospital administrator, says the elderly patients desperately cling to their belongings and want to have them always "under their eye."

The beds can't be moved out of the wards because the doors are not wide enough. If there was a fire, patients would have to be slid out on sheets or mattresses or moved into wheelchairs.

The only five exits in the three-storey building are staircases. Only two of the hospital's 129 patients could walk down those stairs. The rest would have to be carried.

Even the beds are old. They can't be raised and lowered as modern beds can be, and the only way to raise a patient is to prop him or her up with pillows.

There is a physiotherapy room, but it can't be used at times because in it is the special hydraulic lift bath used by male patients. When the men are receiving their baths, the physiotherapy has to stop. There is no other place for the bath.

Crowded ward, old beds still get main job done

The cramped quarters are hard on the staff, too.

Nurses have to walk from one wing to another to empty a bedpan. There is simply no space to duplicate facilities in all wings.

There are not enough linen closets and the changing of beds goes on constantly in the hospital. As a result, the staff is constantly wasting time bringing up linen from the laundry and refilling the closets.

Patients require constant body care, but the amount of hot water available from the boilers has to be carefully scheduled for use.

All photos by Jim Ryan

There is no dish-washing machine in the central kitchen, and all dishes have to be done by hand.

Every electrical outlet in the place is being used, and more are needed.

Amazingly, despite all this, Mount St. Mary is a good hospital. Patients receive the 24-hour service they need, and there is a waiting list of people who want to get in.

The patients range in age from 25 to 99, and all need extended care. The younger ones mostly suffer from such illnesses as muscular dystrophy and multiple sclerosis.

They get better care than they would in private hospitals, and it costs them only $1 a day, compared with about $300 a month in private institutions.

Patients have to be almost helpless to be admitted, so great is the shortage of bed space.

The hospital referendum would provide 600 beds for such patients, and the estimated cost per household of the bylaw is just over $5 a year.

Seafaring planner sails into captain's house

By DON GAIN

When Saanich's new assistant planner—Gilbert Laurensen—left his home in Glamorgan, Wales, 31 years ago to sail the seven seas, he didn't know he'd find home port in a seafaring captain's house in Esquimalt.

But, when he visited British Columbia on a trip across Canada and found it was just like reports he'd read, he decided there was no other place he wanted to live.

He set out from Glamorgan once again, this time in 1937, and came to Terrace, where he worked for Mayer & Whittlesby of New York, master planners of the city of Terrace.

This was followed by five years with the municipalities of Burnaby and North Vancouver, where he worked with planning departments.

In 1942 he came to the Island and he's been with Saanich planning department ever since with the exception of 18 months with the municipal affairs department.

He prefers local rather than regional planning problems, he said this week, and with his new promotion, it looks as if he's settled in. His home has that look, too.

It's the Victorian house on Head Street on the shore of West Bay. The Laurensens have been restoring it over the past few years and it looks just about the same as it did when the seafaring captain, Victor Jacobson built it in 1893. There's a window cornice missing here, a different window there and the iron grill-work gingerbread has gone from the front of the house.

But basically it's the same house, right up to the captain's tower with its view of Victoria Harbor. Mrs. Laurensen says they hope to restore the iron gingerbread and they're still working on the front steps.

She feels the same way about the Victoria area as her husband does. The couple has two children—Jack, 9, and Frances, 8.

"There's more for the young people to do here than there used to be," she said. "This is important to us and to the children. We're happy here and we're planning to stay."

The couple met in Australia during the Second World War. Mrs. Laurensen, Marguerite, is a native of Sydney. They were married on a 48-hour pass in New Zealand.

Mr. Laurensen was a merchant seaman at the time. He spent 4½ war years with the Norwegian, British and Danish merchant marine as a quartermaster. "So he's seen most of the world."

Next to planning and restoring his house, Mr. Laurensen likes collecting old charts and maps.

Mr. Laurensen's planning experience dates back to his boyhood. He signed off his ship in New Zealand and joined that country's civil service as a cadet in planning at the age of 17. He started out as a surveyor and he's been working at planning ever since, with the exception of the war years.

In 1949 he went back to Glamorgan, called back by memories of his youth.

"But you can't go back," he said, "at least not to stay. Everything is different. You feel like a stranger."

He finds his new job "a real challenge."

"What is really needed is an environmental direction survey to find where we're going."

Industry is not the answer, he says.

"Saanich should be a residential municipality. We have to maintain and improve the environment we already have. This is what people are looking for and we should preserve it. We'll have to go to higher densities in residential zoning in certain areas to accommodate them. I feel the municipality's best role is that of a very pleasant land of lakes and parks interspersed with higher-density residential areas."

Clever new stylist at H of G . . .

A new star has been added to the House of Glamour constellation . . . in the person of a charming young stylist named Susan . . . whom Danny has succeeded in luring away from her native Vancouver to join his H of G staff here . . . Last week when our regular hair appointment came up, Danny was out of town so we were assigned to Susan . . . She gave us one of the best shampoos we've ever had . . . then proceeded to do our hair just the way we like it . . . finally leaving us looking . . . and feeling . . . like a million! . . . And the set is staying in just beautifully . . . Apart from the quality of her work, which is top, we were impressed with Susan's delightful personality, her fresh good looks, and the quiet deftness with which she went about things . . . After a bit of prodding on our part, she told us modestly that she was the youngest hairdresser ever to obtain a licence in Vancouver . . . that was six years ago . . . and ever since she's been starring in one of the mainland city's top salons . . . She adores her work . . . and takes greatest pleasure in creating "special" hairstyles for weddings, graduations and other important social events . . . We're sure you'll like Susan! . . . When we dropped by last week for a chat with dress designer Ursula Redwood at her temporary quarters on Vancouver St. . . . we found her not only busy as a bee creating beautiful clothes for eager customers . . . but also deep in preparations for moving into her new studio on Oak Bay Ave. . . a move which is taking place at this very moment, as a matter of fact . . . and next Tuesday, Oct. 15th, she'll be installed and ready for business! . . . School Dress Torrid Issue

NEW YORK (AP) — The annual fracas between school officials and students over classroom attire is raging across the United States, spiced by glimpses of stocking tops, panties and even navel.

Each of the embattled sides, a spot survey disclosed, had won some, lost some, and the ultimate outcome might fairly be described as moot.

There was hot and generally unresolved controversy over a number of burning questions:

● At what point do a girl's culottes become so brief that they are, so to speak, more like sans-culottes?

● Where is the torrid zone on mini-skirts?

● Should a girl wear Nehru jacket with nothing underneath but panties?

● What is a reasonable length for male sideburns?

School principals from coast to coast were bugged by love beads, and rode off in several directions. Some insisted that the wearing of love beads by males would not do. Others held that love beads, if worn, must be tucked inside shirts. Others said go ahead wear 'em any old way.

Culottes, a sort of split skirt, were taboo last year in Chicago's Morgan Park high school. This term they are permissible if they extend to within two inches of the knee. At Hollywood, Calif., High, culottes must be full enough to look like unsplit skirts, and three inches up is the limit.

Officially fixed mini-skirt lengths, ranged from two inches above the knee in Jefferson Parish, La., to four inches in Glendale, Calif. But there are other less specific views.

The Westport, Conn., school board ruled simply that skirts must cover the girls' "undergarments and their torsos."

The Phoenix, Ariz., high school system ran into Nehru jacket trouble and had to put its foot down.

Explained Mick Herzog, the system's community relations director: "The girls were wearing them with nothing but panties on underneath, which turned everybody on."

"The boys came to school with short Nehru jackets, no undershirts and open at the midriff, showing their navels to show."

Some rulings on sideburns: Glendale, Calif.: No lower than the tip of the ear.

Hollywood, Calif.: Must end at mid-ear.

Pasadena, Calif.: Down to the bottom of the ear.

Happy Custom

In keeping with old Danish custom, friends of Mr. and Mrs. Hans Poulsen, decorated front door of their Joan Crescent home night before their 25th wedding anniversary. It was surprise to couple, also part of the custom. Married in Denmark, Hans and Elze Poulsen moved to Victoria 12 years ago and have two sons and daughter. Friday evening couple was honored at reception at Danish restaurant, Surfside, in Cordova Bay.—(Robin Clarke.)

Geometry in Designing

Briton Bright, Crisp

By EUGENIA SHEPPARD

NEW YORK — David Hicks is one of the incandescent lights in today's interior decorating. He is England's most in-the-lime-light name. It doesn't hurt David Hicks at all that he is young, blond, very English looking, and married to Lord Mountbatten's daughter Pamela.

With their three children, Edwin, Ashley, and India, the Hicks live in an apartment in London's Chelsea section. They have a country house in Oxford that you can see in color in the last number of Compassance des Arts.

With all this background, you might think David Hicks would be given over to dedicating stately old homes in a stately old manner, but not at all.

Asked the other day to name the most exciting object to put in a home today, his answer is an American push-button telephone. For the past week he has been here on all kinds of business and he plans to stay on for a while. Two of his most clearly defined projects are decorating an apartment for Betsy and Hari Theodoropoulos of the Greek shipping family and introducing a small group of his new fabrics for draperies and upholstery.

The fabrics like best — David Hicks likes best — geometry in interior designing. They are crisp, clearest, decisive, and bright, the very antithesis of art nouveau.

The neat patterns are on a variety of fabrics like linen, heavy cotton, and silk twill, and on both white and colored backgrounds. They were picked from a much larger selection of David Hicks' geometrical designs.

Compassance, the firm that has made the fabrics, will present them formally to friends of the designer and a few decorators like Sister Parish and Billy Baldwin. Actually, they have been quietly in circulation for several weeks.

Beauty Advice

"... I have never yet seen a finer method of improving the complexion. Wrinkles are smoothed, dryness is checked, blemishes vanish and the skin takes on a healthy, youthful look..." (Extract from a report by Margaret Merrill suggesting the use of the moist tropical oil of Olaj as a powder base.) Most druggists are now able to obtain supplies of this oil which gives glorious loveliness to the skin.

Career of Costumes

By BILL THOMAS

Designer Allan Granstrom gave up a successful commercial career because "I couldn't stand life in the gutted rut."

Now he is snipping and chalking his way through a mound of cloth to make costumes for the University of Victoria production of Measure for Measure, set to open Oct. 24.

The costume list started out at 42 items. It now is up to 76 and it seems director Ralph Allen is not through yet.

Mr. Granstrom started designing display material for a Spokane department store when he left high school. It was intended as a summer job to make money toward university fees but he liked the job and stayed on. By the time he was 19 he was in charge of the design department, with a staff of 19.

Following a tour of overseas duty, he was discharged and back in Seattle as a display director for a retail chain. It was at this stage of his career that Mr. Granstrom decided to get out of the rut and into a theatre career.

After doing shows for Spokane and Seattle Civic and Community Theatres he was asked to the University of Utah as a guest artist to do costumes and play leads. He played in the Mormon musical, Look on the Land, and in Rip Van Winkle.

When the season ended the designer went to Hollywood to renew army contacts. By chance he met Frank Mac-Donald at a party. Mr. Granstrom was wearing an elaborate vest that his grandfather had worn to his wedding. The director was doing the Wyatt Earp series at the time, and asked if Mr. Granstrom would like a part. He did three shows as a gambler, but unhappily the script had him shot dead after three appearances.

It was following this that Mr. Granstrom decided to make a full-time career of theatre. He was invited to teach by his university associates in Utah, but couldn't because he did not have a degree. He decided it was time he did, and he started to study in Utah.

Graduation took him a year longer than usual because he took time off to work a season with the Stratford, Conn., Festival. It was the season the company did a show for the Kennedys at the White House. Mr. Granstrom was busy with costumes and as a production assistant. Before returning to Utah, he stopped off in New York and worked for two months on costumes for a musical titled All in Love.

After finishing his general theatre degree, Mr. Granstrom went to Northwestern University for a master's degree. He completed this in costume design.

When he returned to Seattle, he was invited to join the repertory company as resident designer, but by the end of the first season he was also busy acting. He did seven roles in addition to designing and building costumes the following year.

He toured with the company when it played Twelfth Night here and decided he would like to move to Victoria. When the repertory company expanded to a season of 12 plays, he decided it was too much and made the move to the University of Victoria. This is his second season.

The production of Measure for Measure has proved demanding, Mr. Granstrom says. "We have probably had 30 people working on these costumes from time to time. This is a new theatre and it will take us at least 10 years to build a good basic wardrobe. If a costume is striking and makes an impression on an audience, it will take at least six years for them to forget the costume unless it is radically remade."

"For this show I talked with the director and set designer and suggested we get consistency by using the woodcuts of Albrecht Durer as a costume guide. This sets the play in the 1500s. I have used orange and blue as the main color themes. This contrasts the cool dark with the warm corrupt."

After the Phoenix production, Mr. Granstrom will fly east to design Lion in Winter. This is the opening production in the new Ottawa Town Theatre. He will also do the costumes for a production of The Odd Couple and act as one of the poker players.

By February he hopes to be back in Victoria to stay in his costume studio and teach a theatre course. Needless to say, he is building one of the 76 costumes for himself. He has been cast in Measure for Measure.

Mainland China Topic At Two-Day Teach-In

A two-day forum on mainland China will be held at the University of Victoria Oct. 25 and 26, co-sponsored by the Cordova Bay United Church Council and the United Church Women.

Films on China and debate by Canadians who have visited Communist China will be featured. A highlight of the China teach-in will be a four-man panel discussion.

Mrs. Molly Phillips, chairman of the organizing committee, said Saturday that the $3 registration fee includes a Chinese dinner.

The program is "for the cultivation of better-informed public opinion," said Mrs. Phillips.

She said the organizing committee had tried to provide a balance of opinion on Communist China.

Background to contemporary China will be given by Prof. Charles Burchill, historian on the faculty of Royal Roads Canadian Services College.

A panel debate will present Professor L. E. Willmott, former faculty member of West China Union University; Dr. Richard Powers, professor of political science at the University of Victoria; Rev. Geoffrey Smith, a former China missionary; and Colin Crisp, a member of the B.C. division of economics and statistics.

Information on registration is available from Mrs. H. D. Selby-Helen, 2373 Bowker Avenue.

Anthem's Soul Version Lead Balloon

Watch for It!
Coming Soon!

By KING LEE

Soul singers, take heed, your versions of the U.S. national anthem just aren't making it with the majority of American audiences.

Two recent performances left the standing audiences stone cold. Aretha Franklin, Lady Soul herself, soaked it to the Democrats at their national convention and Jose Feliciano laid it on the Tiger fans in Detroit during the opening of game five of the World Series.

Both singers can take solace in the fact that at least they didn't forget the words to the song like Bob Goulet did before a world championship boxing match.

Next thing you know, Tiny Tim will probably do the honors to open a Miss America pageant.

On the subject of Tiny Tim, whoever was responsible for the placement on the Ed Sullivan Show last Sunday of Tiny Tim directly after Dionne Warwick captured the audience with a medley of her Bacharach-David hits should have his or her head examined. It made Miss Warwick sound all that much better.

The Beatles' recording company, Apple records, is just over a month old and its initial four releases have sold more than 3,000,000 copies.

To diabolical rotomats that the Beatles are crumbling as a group, Hey Jude/Revolution has been the fastest breaking single since I Want to Hold Your Hand, in November, 1963. More than 2,000,000 copies have been sold in the U.S. and almost 500,000 in Britain, where "200,000 can mean a No. 1 record."

If there is anything to be happy about being toppled from the leading spot on the British hit parade it must be that their label's surprise star, Mary Hopkins, did the toppling.

The Beatles' next album, the first on their own label, will be released in November and will be a two-disc set.

Paramount Pictures' Romeo and Juliet, which is aimed at the teenage audience, held its American premiere in New York recently and at the opening, the Stone Poneys, Blood, Sweat and Tears and Janis Joplin with Big Brother and the Holding Co. performed for the young first-afternooners. Other youth premieres of this picture, using well known recording groups, will take place across the country.

Hit LPs: A slow week, album-wise, with Donovan's Hardy Gurdy and Bill Cosby's 200 M.P.H. holding the spotlight. Two albums coming soon which should be tremendous sellers are Montage by the Love Generation and Ian and Sylvia's Full Circle.

Hit Singles: Snell of Income by Southwest F.O.B. and Chewy, Chewy by Ohio Express are getting the most local call. Marvin Gaye and Tammy Terrell have a new one coming. Keep on Lovin' Me, Honey, Les Bicyclettes de Belsize is Engelbert Humperdinck's latest.

Teenager

Going Steady Good, Bad

By KITTE TURMELL

When should you begin to date or go steady or get engaged or married?

Here are the answers from Eric Johnson, vice-principal of Germantown Friends' School, Philadelphia. He's author of books for teenagers that include Love And Sex in Plain Language.

Note these pointers from Mr. Johnson, a happily-married man with a lively family, including Becky, 15; Jeffrey, 14, and Emily, 10.

How and when should teenagers begin to date?

Eric Johnson says, "It depends on how mature they are. In brief, I'd say — when they want to: in groups in junior high school, informal, at-home and afternoon drugstore dates. From 10th grade up (perhaps younger for some girls), single dating may be okay. It's not a good idea though for a young girl to date a boy several years older."

When and why should teenagers go steady — for how long?

"In general, I'd say that it depends so much on age and maturity that one cannot prescribe an age or a length of time. Any boy or girl who has never gone steady for a while has missed something; so has one who has only gone steady."

Here are comments on going steady, pro and con, which Eric Johnson collected from seventh, eighth and ninth-graders.

Pro-steady comments were: "I think it would be good experience, if boy, girl wish to date exclusively." "My mother doesn't approve but it would give me a more secure feeling in the world." "I have a girl friend whom I like and I don't want anyone else going out with her."

Anti-steady comments were: "Seems very illogical to me. It prevents any kind of circulation and puts a label on you." "When you go steady you usually end up in the gutter." "It's rather vulgar."

Here are ideas on what to think about before getting engaged and married, from Eric Johnson. Ask yourself these questions:

"What sort of person do I want to share my life with?" "How do I know I am in love with the other person?" "What do I mean by love?" "Am I ready (if a girl) to be the mother of children?"

"Am I ready (if a boy) to support, with money and with love, a wife and children?"

"Note: An ancient, unmarried Quaker friend of mine, a woman, a lovely, humorous, attractive, wise and warm, when asked why she had never married, said: 'Three know, it takes a mighty good husband to be better than none.' There's a lot of wisdom in this."

Letters to Kitte

Friend Problem: Is She Friend?

Dear Kitte: I have a problem with a friend. She is mad most of the time because of little things which would mean nothing to me. When she is mad she tells my other friends lies about me and calls me terrible names.

I don't do these things to her. Should I keep her as a friend? — No Name Please.

Dear No Name Please: Tell her you want to be her friend. Tell her the truth about what she says that's untrue about you and how much this bothers you. Then ignore whatever she does to upset you and try to spend more time with other friends with whom you can be happier.

Dear Kitte: I am a 13-year-old, 106 pound girl with a problem. I'm not quite 5 feet and I weight 106 pounds. My measurements are barely a 32-25-34. As you can see I'm in bad shape.

I am on a diet and I'm faithful—at least I have been. My arms and legs are flabby. My stomach isn't really large, but large enough. My hips are wide. My bust is comparatively flat, and small. I do some exercises now and I sure hope you can help me because I'm willing to accept advice and I need it!—Shapeless.

Dear Shapeless: Don't worry about your bust-measurements. You'll develop, as you mature, and exercising will help you to keep in proportion during your teen growth.

Here are exercises recommended by Evelyn Lowendahl, an international expert on corrective physical education:

- To develop bust: Lift hands overhead, with fingers stretched to the ceiling as far as you can go. Do this until you feel a pull on the waist. Repeat 10 times, each morning and night. Later stretch to 20 times each morning and night.
- For flabby arms: Swing arms overhead. Play tennis, badminton and volleyball.
- For firm legs: Be active. Walk and go out for active sports. Stretch your legs.
- For slim hips: Lie on back, arms out at shoulders. Roll from side to side, from one hip to the other, 50 rolls once a day.

Dear Kitte: What do you serve for an informal inexpensive wedding reception?

Dear Sharon: Fruit punch—and cake. You may also offer champagne or wine, coffee, mints, nuts, etc. Many now serve punch from bowls, and use paper cups, napkins, cake-plates, and plastic forks.

Winning Contract

BRIDGE QUIZ
A tricky problem occurred very frequently. In order to make one more attempt to reach game after your partner has shown unmistakable signs of wanting to drop the bidding. The key to this problem will usually be your holding in the suit your partner has bid. Normally, the weaker your holding, the more willing should you be to accept your partner's sign-off and settle for less than game.

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ
1. Three spades. North's two-spade bid is discouraging. Nevertheless, it is unlikely that he holds fewer than six spades, so the key requirement of eight trumps in the combined hands will be met. The hand now becomes extremely promising for play at a spade contract, as South's points are in top cards and he has a possible ruffing value in hearts.

2. Pass. Three players in five would probably bid two hearts here, but this would be a great mistake. The hand bears all the hallmarks of a misfit, and since South's suits are of a broken nature, it would be doubly dangerous to proceed. It is good policy on this type of hand to accept a possible small minus rather than court a double try to find a better spot.

3. Pass. This is another potential death trap. The hands fit badly, and South has an intractable holding in North's first suit.

4. Three no trump. This is one occasion when we can disregard partner's sign-off with a clear conscience. An opening lead in a black suit may well give us a trick, and we are likely to steal the game with six diamonds in dummy and three tricks in our own hand.

No ProgressShingle Negotiations Off for Weekend

For 150 strikers at two Victoria shingle mills, Thanksgiving weekend appears to be a time to eat turkey, but not talk it.

William C. Bell, president of the Victoria shingle workers' local that is chartered by the United Brotherhood of Carpenters, said Saturday that no moves had been made by either side to resume talks. He didn't expect any contact will be made during the holiday weekend.

The men, seeking a new contract, took legal strike action Monday and Tuesday at McCart Shingle Co. and Smith Cedar Products. Another 150 men are on strike against Hunting-Merritt in Vancouver.

One of the union's main objectives is a rate revision for some 40 job classifications in the mills.

Mr. Bell said earlier that a number of sawyers involved in the strike were accepting job offers in other parts of the province. He said the demand for the sawyers could leave the two-Victoria mills seriously short-staffed when the time came to resume operations.

Rasminsky Here For Convention

Bank of Canada president Louis Rasminsky will address a luncheon sponsored by the Canadian Club and the Federated Council of Sales Finance Companies at the Empress Hotel at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday. The luncheon, in the ballroom, is being held in conjunction with the three-day convention of the Federated Council, which begins the same day.

Award Winner

Donna Anne Outhbert, 21, of Jordan River, has received $500 bursary awarded by B.C. and Yukon division of Canadian Cancer Society. She is first-year medicine student at the University of British Columbia. Miss Outhbert has just completed three years with first-class honors in biochemistry at University of Victoria.

Tisdalle Speaker

John Tisdalle, M.L.A., Saanich and The Islands, will be guest speaker at the October meeting of the Greater Victoria Association on Alcoholism at 8 p.m. Wednesday in First United Church, 305 Balmoral.

Hope for Alcoholics'Terrifying Disease' Can Be Overcome

Charlie B. of Victoria is waging his fight with a "terrifying disease" — alcoholism — and he and his friends want to help other "afflicted" Victorians conquer the same enemy.

Today from 2 to 4 p.m. at a public meeting sponsored by the Victoria Alcoholics Anonymous in the Empress Hotel ballroom, Charlie and his friends will discuss "The Rebirth of an Alcoholic."

"If the disease of alcoholism is affecting your life or that of a relative, come and hear what has and can be done," they urge.

CHARLIE KNOWS
And Charlie knows about alcoholism.

Although he hasn't touched a drink in seven years, 50-year-old Charlie "once swam in the rotten stuff."

The uncertainty, hardship and pain Charlie caused his family will never leave him. But his family did.

'NO CHOICE'
"They had no choice," Charlie said, of his beautiful wife, who has since remarried, and his now grown children.

"I drank away our home, furniture, car and my career. (A lawyer, Charlie was disbarred). I caused them 12 of the unhappiest years they'll ever live."

"I walked in footsteps of self-pity," he said, "and fittingly enough have been found peering in more than one of this city's gutters."

BEHIND THE SCENES
"When my family tried to help me, I would threaten them with suicide."

According to most alcoholics, Charlie's story is not common among alcoholics.

Another Victoria alcoholic, Jim W., says only 3 per cent of alcoholics hit such road.

But he agrees all alcoholics make miserable partners in marriage. It's the aim of Alcoholics Anonymous to end this misery, he said.

VICTORIA'S FIRST
And Jim W. told the story of another alcoholic Victorian, also named Charlie.

"Charlie M. (in 1941) was not only Victoria's first AA member, he was the first registered member in Canada. He still lives in Victoria, and is still sober."

Besides today's public meeting, AA members from the Pacific Northwest met Saturday and will meet again Monday for a series of seminars during the Victoria fellowship's 15th annual rally.

Enriqueta Basilio touches torch to gas jets signifying Games opening

Ring of Steel Guards Olympic Flame

MEXICO CITY (CP) — The 1968 Olympic Games opened Saturday in a spirit of peace and brotherhood, although 6,000 Mexican marines, soldiers and police stood shoulder to shoulder outside the Olympic Stadium to guard against any repetition of recent student riots here. (See stories, picture, Page 15.)

President Gustavo Diaz Ordaz officially opened the Games, first ever held in Latin America, at 12:33 p.m. Mexico City time.

A record 108 countries participated in the traditional opening march past of athletes before a capacity crowd of 80,000. In accordance with tradition, Greece, homeland of the Olympics, was first and host country Mexico brought up the rear.

North Korea stayed out because the International Olympic Committee would not allow it to call itself the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

More than 7,000 athletes stood in the stadium infield as 6,200 pigeons and 40,000 balloons soared into the bright, sunny sky. The temperature was 70 degrees.

Competition begins today in several sports, including track, boxing and rowing, and the Games end Sunday, Oct. 27.

Swimming, in which Canada is expected to make its strongest showing, starts Thursday, Oct. 17.

Apollo Plays Tag 'Yaba Daba Doo!'

HOUSTON (AP) — Plagued by a cold, command pilot Walter M. Schirra Jr. missed his Apollo 7 spaceflight in pursuit of a wildly tumbling target in space Saturday, then played tag with it in a make-believe rescue of two astronauts lost in moon orbit.

"It's tumbling rather wildly so we want to stay away from it," the astronauts reported about the spent second stage of the Saturn rocket they had chased across the skies high over the Pacific. (See also Page 13.)

"That was a ride and a half," Schirra said after the manoeuvre was completed. Schirra broke away from the rocket for the last time. He also told the ground controllers that he would use the ship's portable television camera to give America a look at the astronauts in space sometime Monday morning.

The Apollo 7 inched as close as 70 feet of the tumbling rocket and jammed on — the rocket crashed, to avoid getting too close. Then it hovered there for nearly half an hour.

With astronauts Dean F. Fiske and Walter Cunningham at his side, Schirra took more than three hours to close the five-mile gap between Apollo 7 and the rocket, working out his own flight path by computer, sextant and telescope.

It is the basic manoeuvre a moon pilot would have to use if the space cab taking two astronauts to the moon's surface were disabled and stranded in lunar orbit. Should that happen, the life pilot in the mothership would have to swing down on the space cab to rescue his fellow fliers.

The astronauts reported a progressive dirty window problem. "The centre hatch window

The Colonist staff will observe the Thanksgiving holiday Monday and there will be no paper Tuesday. Next editions will appear Wednesday morning.

Wearing a white track suit and holding in her right hand a torch lit on Mount Olympus in Greece, she ran into the stadium, around the synthetic, 400-metre track and up 90 steps to the urn.

The only track final today will be the 10,000 metres, in which outstanding runners from every continent are expected to provide one of the closest races of the Games.

Heats are scheduled in all seven rowing events.

Dublin Police Duck Bombs

DUBLIN (UPI) — Demonstrators protesting alleged Protestant repression of Roman Catholics in Northern Ireland attacked police with gasoline bombs and sticks in front of the British Embassy Saturday.

Then they marched away in ranks, throwing sticks and smashing the windows of several government buildings and the Shelburne Hotel, site of a clash between police and demonstrators earlier this year.

At least three policemen were reported injured and about 10 youths reported arrested.

'Of Course It's Aid'

Batteries, Boats Fly to Biafra

WEST BERLIN — Four and a half tons of rubber boats, several tons of thick copper tubing, 300 compasses and 5,000 electric batteries were among "relief supplies" flown to Biafra last week.

The stores, the first load of a private airlift, were sent on a DC-4 chartered in Rome by Caritas, the Roman Catholic organization, to fly supplies to Gabon for Biafra.

Meissner was a paratrooper. Now he is an actor.

Meissner ("today I am for non-violence") returned from Biafra this week.

"Everything we take to Biafra is of course aid," he said. "If boats are used by Biafran soldiers to cross rivers that's all right with me."

The compasses, according to Meissner, are for missionaries and the tubing for hospital water pipes. He says the half ton of batteries are for electric torches. But West German newspapers reported recently that the Biafran army has developed a "rocket launcher" from piping and fired by batteries.

Meissner is a personal friend of Col. C. Oduro Ojukwu, the Biafran leader. He and his secretary, a theology student, have raised $20,000 to cover the cost of the first airlift.

At Libreville, French aircraft — military planes, according to one report: "French Red Cross aircraft," according to West Berlin organizers — ferried the supplies into the Biafran bush.

The head of the organization, a 40-year-old German, Gunter Meissner, then flew to meet the charterers at Frankfurt.

Eventually the plane was loaded up in Frankfurt with the rubber boats, copper tubing, batteries and other stores and took off to fly to West Africa via Paris, with Meissner on board.

Its basic cargo, for the German and French branches of Caritas, consisted of two tons of fish and milk powder and two tons of medicines. But some of this had to be off-loaded in Paris to make room for more stores for the West Berlin organization, including "four tons of dried fish."

Eye witnesses say boxes of undisclosed content as well as cases described as medicine for the Order of The Knights of Malta were put aboard.

Normally a charter aircraft for Gabon must apply for landing rights at least 48 hours ahead. But a telephone call to Paris by Meissner produced instant clearance.

The West Berlin organization, which appears to draw on considerable funds from private donors, operates from Meissner's apartment in the British sector.

Fervor Supplants Strife For Opening of Games

MEXICO CITY (CP) — President Gustavo Díaz Ordaz of Mexico officially opened the first Olympic Games ever held in Latin America Saturday, following a marchpast of athletes from a record 124 countries.

Canada's 144-member delegation, 24th in the order of march, drew tremendous applause from the capacity crowd of 80,000 in the Olympic Stadium. It includes some of the best swimmers here and Canada is looking for its first Olympic medals in this sport since 1928.

FERRY GROUP

The Canadian women were bright red jackets and white skirts that were well above the knee. It was a pretty group. The men had black trousers and red jackets.

After a summer of turmoil in this Mexican capital, capped by recent student riots that left scores dead and injured, the Games opened peacefully.

FIRST WOMAN

Mexican sprinter Enriqueta Basilio became the first woman to light the Olympic flame when she carried the torch around the track and up many stairs to the summit of the stadium on the last lap of its journey from Mount Olympus in Greece.

GLAMOROUS PARADE

After the huge five-ringed Olympic symbol made of inflated balloons was released, the world's most glamorous parade of athletes began. There are 108 nations represented here by 7,300 athletes.

First came Greece, according to tradition, as mothers of the Olympic Games. The Greeks were conservatively dressed in grey slacks and blue jackets.

The countries marched in Spanish alphabetical order. The first big contingent was Germany, East and West, competing separately now but still marching together.

The first Latin American team, the women attired in blue suits and white hats and the men in navy jackets and slacks.

Australia presented the first miniskirt, their girls in bright yellow and white wearing skirts six inches above the knee.

The Belgian girls also had skirts well above the knees.

STANDING OVATION — The crowd roared to its feet and gave thunderous applause to the large Czechoslovakian team when it came through the gate.

The girls wore business-like dark suits and the men wore also attired conservatively with dark suits and straw hats.

WORE BLACK SHOES — A woman carried the flag for the U.S. team for the first time in history. She was Janice York Romany, a California fencer participating in her sixth Games.

The entire team wore black shoes. There had been a threat that Negro athletes might blacken their shoes in protest.

Abbe Bikila, two-time winner of the marathon, carried the flag for the Ethiopian delegation, attired in white robes.

The French had one of the smartest-dressed teams in the parade, led by Christine Caron.

South Vietnam drew loud applause with its unusual group, consisting of 12 men in ordinary business suits and two young women in split dresses that reached to their ankles.

At the end of the parade came the big Mexican team, marching last as is traditional for the host nation. The applause was deafening.

The Games were declared open with a 30-word phrase by President Díaz Ordaz when he said: "Today, October 12, 1968, I declare inaugurated the Olympic Games of Mexico, which commemorate the 15th Olympiad of the modern era."

Committee Insists on Tests

MEXICO CITY (AP)—The International Olympic Committee medical commission insisted Saturday night all girl swimmers who do not take a sex test will be barred from Olympic competition. Prince Alexandre de Merode of Belgium, head of the commission, said some girls have voluntarily taken the test despite the International Swimming Federation's refusal to make the test mandatory.

"We are trying now to determine how many girls have voluntarily taken the test. If we find even one girl who has not taken it, she will be barred from competition."

Win and Tie for Cougars

By Jim Tang

B.C. LIONS will surely have to consider giving Paul Broders another look after yesterday's game in Toronto. Give a complete game for the first time, the former Oregon State University quarterback looked quite promising as he directed Lions to their biggest scoring total of the season . . . it was a help for Victoria O'Brien but no one connected with the club was at all pleased about the Mackay being out by the Canadian national soccer team. Mackay was on the list of players selected for the first World Cup game against Brazil, but was surprisingly called in and told he hadn't made the team . . . although Spokane Shakers announced a crowd of 12,500 fans for a Continental Football League game against Seattle Seahawks, it appears that the Western Division is having its usual troubles. The Redskins went home to draw no more than 54 fans for an interlocking game against Little Rock . . . stilliest name for a sports award is the one Schenley gives for the "most outstanding" player in the Canadian Football League. It makes one wonder who might be the least outstanding . . . on that subject, Calgary-quarterback Peter Lima is playing well enough to become the second player—Jackie Parker was the first—to win the award two years in a row. However, Toronto-halfback Bill Symons and the fellow who would get this vote, Saskatchewan-halfback George Reed, have provided credentials that are difficult to overlook . . . Simon Fraser University will hold its fourth annual basketball clinic next Saturday between 8 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. and any coach or player interested is welcome. Gary Taylor at Oak Bay High School can provide any additional information needed . . . it seems that Canadian television networks haven't done right by their advertisers in not scheduling even one of the Saskatchewan-Calgary football games this season. Tomorrow's game would certainly draw a much bigger audience than the B.C.-Montreal affair. Even in these parts.

Football success is not always accomplished on the field. Sometimes it is done with a telephone.

Such, Toronto columnist Jim Proudfoot relates, was the case this season for Ottawa Rough Riders, as Paul a bet as way to win the Grey Cup because assistant-coach Kelly Mote is a fast man with a dial.

The player who may make the difference for the Riders is a talented blur named Vic Washington, perhaps the best rookie import of the season in the Canadian Football League. But for Mote's addition to sports-page reading and his act-now disposition, B.C. Lions might not be fighting for nothing better than fourth place or Hamilton Tiger-Cats might be Grey Cup favorites.

Mote, Proudfoot says, noticed an item in the New York Times which said that Washington wouldn't be returning to the University of Wyoming because of a fight with a referee in a house-league basketball game. Mote was instantly galvanized into action. Like everyone whose business it is to know about these things, he knew that Washington was an outstanding halfback who was a cinch to be an early pick in the National and American Football League at the end of his senior year. The Ottawa coach picked up his telephone, got through to CFL headquarters and placed Washington's name on the Riders' negotiation list.

Washington, ineligible for the NFL and AFL, was happy to get a chance to play in the CFL, and it's history now that he became an instant star. But he might have been starring for the Lions or Tiger-Cats had Mote delayed his call by 30 minutes. Within an hour after he had made sure of CFL rights for Washington, Lions and Tiger-Cats both called to have Washington put on their negotiation list.

BILL WAKEHAM, along with Wayne Volmer and other Canadians trying to get a four card from the newly-formed Association of Professional Golfers, might be unable to enter the Canadian Open or play on the Canadian pro tour next season. It would happen if the APG and the Professional Golfers Association continue to be unable to settle their differences and the CPGA, as can be reasonably expected, goes along with the USPGA . . . Ottawa Rough Riders lost part of what they gained by getting Vic Washington when they allowed Dave Crommer to go to Calgary Stampede in the deal for Lovell Coleman. Crommer is a Canadian and perhaps the best rookie halfback in the Western Football Conference . . . George Schell, a Brunswick, N.Y., bus driver who averaged 162 with it last season recently presented what is believed to be the oldest temple ball in use to the National Bowling Museum. It was purchased by Schell's father in 1905 and carried a three-year guarantee. It was in 1905, incidentally, that the first hard rubber bowling ball was introduced. Balls previously were made of lignum vitae, a tropical wood of such high specific density that it cannot float . . . for horse-racing fans who keep asking about the possibility of fall racing returning to Hastings Park, about all that is known for certain is that a big majority of owners don't want to race at Sandown in the spring but the B.C. Jockey Club prefers it that way. It will likely be settled within a few weeks, perhaps by the end of the month . . . 25 Sunday night National Hockey League games will be available to Victoria radio listeners this season with Foster Hewitt doing the play-by-play for games involving Toronto Maple Leafs and Danny Gallivan at the mike for games involving Montreal Canadiens. First game, Toronto at Detroit, can be heard this afternoon over CBU (690) starting at 4.

Victoria Cougars gained a committee-room victory and a tie on the ice Saturday as they continued to make progress in their search for the B.C. Junior Hockey League championship.

Before playing to a 3-3 tie in the evening with Vernon Essos to assure retention of first place, the Cougars won the rights to revise Dave Cousin, who played last season with Kelowna Buckaroos.

TELEGRAPH VOTE

Cousin, central figure in a "poaching" charge made against the Cougars by Scotty Angus, manager of the Kelowna club, became Victoria property and was released to the Cougars after a telegraph vote by the B.C. Amateur Hockey Association following an appeal from Cousin on his suspension by the Kelowna club.

Announcement of his release was made after a BCJHL meeting in Penticton Saturday morning.

STEADY DEFENSIVELY

Cousin, who made the trip to the Okanagan with the Cougars, was in the lineup for the game against Vernon, playing between Dave Williams and Lon Myles. He drew a penalty and played a steady defensive game.

Rain Delays Golf Final

VIRGINIA WATER, England (AP) — Rain postponed the finals and a sudden-death semi-final playoff Saturday in the fifth annual World Match Play Golf Championship to today.

Gulls, Totems Register Wins

San Diego Gulls, taking full advantage of a chance to open their season with three successive games against the new-entrant Denver Spurs, scored three second period goals en route to a 5-1 Western Hockey League win at San Diego.

Don Carter gave Spurs a 1-0 lead in the first period, but a goal by Bruce Carmichael, on a power play, and two by Fred Hitt moved Gulls into a 3-1 lead in the second. Willie O'Ree and Dave Richardson added goals in the third period.

Gayle Fleckler, playing the 1,094th game of his pro career, assisted on each goal as Seattle Totems trimmed Vancouver Canucks, 4-1, at Seattle. He also assisted on Totems' lone goal in their opening tie with Phoenix and now is within four points of becoming the second player in hockey history to top 1,500 points. Gordie Howe was the first.

Bob Courcy with two, John Hanna and Jack Michie were Seattle scorers while John Golin scored for Canucks.

Mariners, missing three players attending Canadian national championship in Winnipeg, lost their first game of the season Saturday as University of Victoria Varsity shut out Mariners, 7-0, at Lansdowne Junior High School. Oak Bay climbed into a first-place tie, trouncing Sailors, 8-1, at Windsor Park.

Grasshoppers and University played to a scoreless tie at Victoria High School in the other game.

While Cousin and his line failed to produce any points, point-guard Grant Evans continued to be the early-season scoring sensation.

Evans, who scored 25 goals, seven of them in one game for a league record, for Kamloops Rockets last season, fired in all three Victoria goals. They were his eighth, ninth and 10th scoring shots of the season and gave him 15 points for the four games the Cougars have played.

He scored his first two goals in the first period after Bob Mayer had given Essos the lead, then tied it with a power-play goal in the third period after the Vernon club had gone ahead with second-period goals by Lawrence Quichuck and Gerry Vachon.

TROUBLE IN SECOND

Cougars played a solid first period but got into trouble in the second period positionally and seemed headed for defeat before they righted themselves five minutes into the third period.

The Islanders took control in the last 10 minutes and only the standout play of Jack Gilroy, only holdover regular goal-keeper in the league, enabled Essos to get away with one point.

Gilroy stopped 48 shots, 18 in the last 20 minutes. At the other end, Ron Grahame came up with a steady effort to block 42 shots.

Nanaimo River

Bridge Project
Given Go-Ahead

NANAIMO—Approval to call tenders on a new Cedar bridge across the Nanaimo river has been given by the provincial treasury board, it was announced Saturday.

There have been many complaints about the existing wooden bridge because it is narrow and slippery planking.

It is the main link between Nanaimo and the Harmac Pulp Mill.

Premier Bennett said the estimated cost of the new structure is $350,000.

Tenders for widening the Pearson bridge in downtown Nanaimo have an Oct. 24 deadline. Estimated cost of the project has been set at $660,000.

Two additional lanes of traffic are planned for the bridge and new approach lanes will also be constructed.

Cobble Hill Home

Teacher Pair
Aids Indians

COBBLE HILL. — Signe and Knud Norbjerg and their two children who emigrated to Canada from Denmark, spent their first three years on Indian reservations in B.C. and Saskatchewan.

Mr. Norbjerg, 48, has a degree in law and was employed by the government in arbitration. His wife, 32, was a secretary and has studied French and English for four years.

They came to Canada mainly because of a 47 per cent tax on income in Denmark.

ONLY ONES

Two months after their arrival in Canada in 1965, Mr. and Mrs. Norbjerg were employed as teachers at Churchhouse, 22 air miles from Campbell River, on the mainland.

Mrs. Norbjerg said, "We were the only white people in Churchhouse, therefore we were doctors, nurses and just about everything."

They had to have a police dog for protection, she said.

The following school term the Norbjergs lived and taught at the Indian reservation at Sturgeon Landing, Sask., and last term they moved to the reservation at Red Earth, Sask.

Mr. and Mrs. Norbjerg said there is little communication between agencies working with Indians.

TEACHING STUDIES

In August the Norbjergs moved to Cobble Hill. Mr. Norbjerg is attending and teaching German and Mathematics, at the University of Victoria to obtain his teacher's certificate to add to his six years of university education.

Then he hopes to work with the federal government once again in counselling and education.

The Norbjergs bought the shell of the log house Cedar Spring, built by Lorne Martin of Cobble Hill, and they have divided the 34 by 45 foot area into rooms and are now occupying it.

Mr. Norbjerg said a similar home in Denmark would cost between $42,000 and $45,000.

Byelection Choice Rests Locally

'No Outsider' Pledge
Given by Stanfield

NANAIMO — The Conservatives have no intention of putting forward an "outsider" to contest Nanaimo-Cowichan in the coming by-election, said Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield in an interview Saturday.

"The choice of candidate will rest with the local Conservative association," he said.

"The party here has a good deal of strength. Now we must build it to make the most effective contribution to Parliament that we can."

There had been speculation that the Conservatives might field a leading member of the party.

Rear-Admiral Jeffrey Brock came to the Island from Nova Scotia to contest the riding in the June federal election. He came third.

Mr. Stanfield concentrated on local issues when he spoke to the Conservative association later Saturday.

VOTERS' CHANCE

Referring to four main government policies, Mr. Stanfield said voters, especially those in the Nanaimo riding, could indicate the government's inaction by voting for the Conservatives at the next opportunity.

"I think Canadians may well wish to indicate that they wish the government to be more compassionate, less secretive, and more representative concerning fiscal policy. You in this constituency will have an excellent opportunity, through your next representative, to put these matters clearly before the electorate."

NIGERIAN WAR

Mr. Stanfield referred to "the government's tendency to remain detached for some time — from the Nigerian Biafra crisis as an example."

He thought many scientists could become discouraged and leave the country.

ROBERTS BANK

Speaking in Vancouver earlier, Mr. Stanfield suggested that a federal government organization should take a hand in major port developments such as Roberts Bank.

He told a press conference such an organization, probably under the department of transport, was needed "to make commitments" about port facilities, and consult with the officials involved in harbor projects to "make sure it isn't just a matter of improvisation."

ANDREAS IN DARK

"Even Robert Andreas, minister without portfolio, who was assigned to look into the situation didn't know about the reorganization. His position was undermined."

Discussing the decision to scrap two scientific projects including the proposed Queen Elizabeth Observatory in the Okanagan — Mr. Stanfield said the action had been taken without any adequate explanation to the scientific community or the public.

Nanaimo Tories Elect Lawyer

NANAIMO — Nanaimo lawyer Ted Strongtharm has been elected president of Nanaimo Conservative Association. He replaces Len Nyquist who has moved out of the constituency.

John Norton of Qualicum, vice-president, said Saturday that "despite the last election, the Conservatives are still a potent force in this constituency and now have a good candidate prospect for the forthcoming by-election."

Mr. Norton declined to name the prospect.

"If we could win this riding, it could be the greatest boost our party could get—both federally and provincially," he commented.

Douglas Tells Convention:

Disenchanted Young People
Protest with Long Hair

VANCOUVER (CP) — Youth are often crude and their aims are sometimes confused," said Mr. Douglas, "but basically this is a protest movement against a society that has failed to meet man's deepest needs and impedes realization of his finest aspirations."

"I am on the side of youth," he said.

Beards, long hair and mini-skirts are merely symbols of a generation disenchanted with modern society, Mr. Douglas told 300 delegates at the three-day British Columbia Young NDP convention.

"The methods of the young

Mr. Douglas said: "The frantic scramble for the almighty dollar has set man against his fellow man."

SOCIAL JUSTICE

Youth must involve itself in the struggle for social justice, he said.

"You must help direct the tides of change, and the change must be democratic and it must be intelligent."

GIANT CORPORATIONS

He said the young are protesting against a society dominated by 500 or 600 giant corporations, which set their own prices, generate their own capital and influence consumer buying patterns.

In this society, unorganized

Zone Meeting

Fifty-nine members of Legion women's auxiliaries from north-central Vancouver Island zone attended a recent council meeting at Tofino.

It was the first time an auxiliary zone meeting had been held there.

Branch reports showed that despite a two-month summer recess most had been quite active, said a representative.

A hard bowl competition was won by Mrs. Katie Monks of Tofino. The next zone meeting will be at Omineca March 5.

Paper Record

The number one paper machine at Elk Falls Co. set a daily record of 40 tons in September.

It beat a figure recorded in May by three tons.

The combined daily average newspaper production from two machines in September was 740 tons — also a record.

The previous high was 740 tons a day in August.

Badge Winner

A second class badge was presented to Margaret Hawkins of Gold River Guides by Mrs. D. Elliot, district commissioner, in a recent ceremony.

Margaret's father, former Gold River works superintendent, has accepted a position in Nanaimo.

Mrs. Elliot congratulated Margaret on her achievement.

It was also announced that Sandra Pinkiewicz, who was unable to be present, has won health and first aid badges.

Tourist Folder

Preliminary plans for a new Vancouver Island tourist folder were shown to directors of the Vancouver Island public bureau at their first full meeting recently at Nanaimo.

The folder may be ready for next season.

In the past six months, 30,000 of the current folders have been distributed, and 200,000 will be ordered for the winter season.

Executive secretary Mike Heppell outlined some difficulties in the proposed installation of Island slide presentations on B.C. Ferries vessels.

Ship Fog Signals Were Silent Before Active Pass Grounding

By DON GAIN

The navigation officer of HMCS Qu'Appelle told a court martial at CFB Esquimalt yesterday that neither his ship nor HMCS Saskatchewan was sounding fog signals when proceeding in fog the morning of Sept. 8.

The grounding of the Saskatchewan that morning at the entrance to Active Pass is the reason for the court martial of Cmdr. Norman Jackson, skipper of the Esquimalt-based ship.

The commander has pleaded not guilty to three charges of negligence in connection with the grounding.

Qu'Appelle's navigation officer, Sub-Lieut. Paul McKee, said his ship was following the Saskatchewan in line astern in Georgia Strait at a distance of about 500 yards and was steering courses passed to him by the Saskatchewan.

The Qu'Appelle is junior to the Saskatchewan in the Second Escort Squadron organization.

When asked by the prosecuting officer if Qu'Appelle or Saskatchewan were sounding any fog signals, Sub-Lieut. McKee said his ship was "making no sound signals" and neither was Saskatchewan.

Asked if he heard any other foghorns, he said he "heard no others."

The two ships had left Vancouver for Esquimalt at 9 a.m. At 10:45 a.m., the navigation officer said, he took his position and found it was two or three miles to port of the track they should have been making good.

"At 10:50 I took another and it agreed with the previous one," he said. "I didn't see how we could be so far off track."

At 11 a.m., he said, he took another position and found his ship was 400 yards to port of the desired track.

At the court martial, which began Wednesday, Lieut. Robert Howden, navigation officer of the Saskatchewan, testified that he had not prepared a blind passage plan for Active Pass.

Sub-Lieut. McKee testified Friday that he had made his passage plan "basically visual, though I had a blind wrap."

He said the turn into Active Pass was late for both ships. Qu'Appelle "skipped over in the wake of Saskatchewan," he said.

It was shortly after that a message from the Saskatchewan ordered the Qu'Appelle to "act independently." There a message came that the lead ship had grounded, had stopped engines and was going astern, he said.

Lt. Cmdr. Thomas Kowalski, engineering officer in the repair department at CFB Esquimalt, testified that he went to RMC Dockyard the evening of Sept. 8 to inspect the Saskatchewan.

The destroyer-escort went aground. He said his regular job is that of radar operator and he was filling in because the regular echo sounder operator was on leave.

The young sailor said he thought the echo sounder was malfunctioning when he saw the depth under the ship drop from 60 fathoms to 12 and, shortly after, to 9½ feet.

The reading then jumped to 35 feet, then to zero. He said he reported the reading twice without, an acknowledgment and was reporting it for the third time when the ship ran aground.

Three officers who testified earlier in the morning said they heard a foghorn a short time before the ship grounded but did not report it.

The executive officer of the Saskatchewan, Lt. Cmdr. William Hall, said the foghorn was loud enough that he "felt the navigation team were aware of it."

The officer of the watch, Lieut. William Rucka, told the court he was not with the blind pilotage team of the Saskatchewan when the ship grounded.

He said that as officer of the watch, he was in general command on the bridge.

He said he normally would have been head of a radar team working out the ship's forward progress. But, at the time, he was "special sea duty officer of the watch," in charge of the ship in tight spots, such as harbors. He had taken over duties previously assigned to an officer who had left the ship and was not replaced, he said.

There had been a substantial turnover of senior officers on the ship, he said.

"At that time I was the only officer left in the ship with a watchkeeping ticket," whose other duties were not considered more important, the lieutenant said.

Defending officer is Cmdr. J. L. Henderson, office of the judge advocate general, Ottawa. Prosecuting officer is Major D. W. Ward of the office of the deputy judge advocate in Winnipeg. Judge Advocate is Cmdr. H. C. Ferne of the office of the judge advocate general in Ottawa. Capt. F. C. Frewer, base commander of CFB Esquimalt, is president of the court.

Children Innocent Victims Of Fees Payment Quarrel

By NANCY BROWN

Victoria's foster and welfare children are the innocent victims of a quarrel between the dentists and the provincial government over fees payment.

The children are being refused all but emergency treatment by dentists who are asking for equal treatment in fees with B.C. doctors.

At present the provincial government will allow 57 per cent of the dentists' 1966-67 fee schedule. The dentists are asking for 90 per cent, which would give them parity with doctors.

Dentists withdrew their services June 30 after a year of negotiations with Welfare Minister Dan Campbell, saying that in the previous year they had provided almost half of the $1,400,000 worth of services to welfare patients in 1966-67.

Foster children and other wards of various children's aid societies have services provided under the same plan.

Pat Hillborn, president of Victoria's Low-Income Group, said Friday her two children have been consistently refused treatment.

"I'm not getting treatment either," she said, "but I'm especially worried about my children. My seven-year-old daughter has already lost one of her molars and the others need fillings."

"This is something that will show up in the future."

She said her group is planning formal protest to the minister at the delayed settlement and its effects upon children.

Meanwhile, some foster children are getting their dental treatment because the Family and Children's Service is footing the bill.

"No child in our care will go without dental treatment regardless of what we have to do," said director Gordon Wright.

"Dentists have refused to do extractions unless they are assured of getting their fee," he said. "This is despite the fact that they have said they will give emergency care."

"In such cases the service is paying for cure — and we're doing it by a process of budgetary surgery which is going to get us into trouble."

Mr. Wright said that to date the service has covered dental treatments only and has not been sending children for regular checkups.

"However, there comes a time when we can't stall this any longer, and we shall have to start paying for checkups," said Mr. Wright.

"It would be very unfortunate if this agency, which is established for the protection of children, should be unable to give good care," he added.

"We had expected that this would be settled by July."

"Mr. Campbell isn't usually one to back down on a problem. I certainly hope that something will be worked out shortly."

Cancer Fund Highest

The Victoria unit of the B.C. and Yukon division of the Canadian Cancer Society has raised $54,334 this year, in the most successful fund-raising drive in the unit's history, campaign chairman Stanley Moore announced Friday.

The figure was an increase of more than 20 per cent over last year's collections of $44,416. The Victoria unit raised more than 10 per cent of the total provincial campaign budget, Mr. Moore said.

A conspicuous feature in this year's campaign, he said, was the sharp increase in memorial gifts. These increased to $4,773 from $1,698.

"Response continued to be strong from the employee groups, too," he said.

Fighting Spirit Keeps Polio Victim Zealous

By MARY TAYLOR

PORT ALBERNI — Congratulations are going out over the Thanksgiving weekend to one of the Alberni Valley's best known couples, Mr. and Mrs. Colin Wilson, on the occasion of their 40th wedding anniversary.

The Wilsons were married Oct. 15, 1928 in the United Church on Argyle Street, now used as the Salvation Army chapel. Young Beulah Rhodes was attended by her sister-in-law, Nellie Wilson, Mrs. Nick Craig, and the late Roy Hill acted as best man.

Medical History

The 40 years have been far from uneventful. Colin Wilson made medical history by surviving not one but three attacks of polio. For years, he has had to use a wheelchair, and walks only with the aid of leg braces and crutches. As his wife smilingly says, this would have been enough to keep many men down, but not Colin.

For several years he has run the McCoy Lake Nursery, and has taken a wide interest in politics. Neither ill health nor Wilson's look old enough to have been married four decades. Perhaps Beulah Wilson's creativity keeps her young.

Wilson

Their house on the hill overlooking McCoy Lake is filled with examples of her artistic skill.

Mrs. Wilson has a delicate touch with flowers, which they both love, and in summer she spends a lot of time in the garden while Mr. Wilson busies himself in the greenhouse.

In Hospital

If she could take time from her fulltime job, plus the extra work of running a home and caring for her husband, Mrs. Wilson could easily find a ready market for her paintings. While she usually paints with great realism, one of her rare abstracts draws a lot of comment in the lobby of a city hotel, where it holds a place of honor.

Because Mr. Wilson has only just been released from hospital after a stay of three weeks, the anniversary will be celebrated quietly, with a Thanksgiving dinner arranged by their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Alf Hudeema.

Despite three children and eight grandchildren, and a far from easy life, neither of the

VICTORIA, B.C., SUNDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1968

A young lad dreams of the summer that is past. — (Alice Wilson photo).

For nigh on 110 years, both by night and day, the errant have been turning out their pockets before a desk sergeant in Victoria's civil bastille. At the stereotyped "sign here," some do so with alacrity. Others, perhaps still in orbit, are unsure of what city they are in.

At times the "property" has consisted of four sticks of gum and a letter from home. Once, years ago, when Roger Peachey and I steered a large, important-looking gentleman to this receipt of custom, his pockets were stuffed with French bank notes. I remember we were puzzled by the values, so the prisoner counted it himself. After which he turned to me with a disdainful look to remark: "I've changed thousands of these in Paris for American tourists."

To which I remember breathing: "I'll bet you have." An Australian can man be had just been removed from a trans-Pacific liner at the outer docks.

It was back in the summer of 1932 that the city police charge office got a welcome change of pace when a prisoner asked for his name, answered: "Edward Eugene Fernando Montagu."

A big name for the little fellow with the pencil-line moustache, but then of course the desk sergeant didn't know he was booking Lord Montagu, second son of the 9th Duke of Manchester.

He had been brought in by a khaki-clad provincial policeman, after conviction on a charge of assault. A simple matter of 25 or one month, but said to say he didn't have the change.

The policeman who brought him in was a rookie called A. G. "Pat" Brabazon. I introduced him to Islander readers in the June 16 issue, with that story of the imitation Death Valley Scotty.

Fernando's name came up the other afternoon as Pat and I were reminiscing, and he told me the basis for the assault charge.

Apparently there came a moment that year, when the Duke's son woke up in Victoria with a hangover, and the realization that somehow or another he had collected five jolly companions. Later, as happens on these occasions, one of them suggested a trip to the South Seas. Apparently one of the party, a Mr. Brooks, while serving in the French Foreign Legion had met up with a Tahitian prince.

After a session of belting the aborigine, apparently the Tahitian had given Mr. Brooks right and title to a South Pacific island. Said Mr. Brooks: "Let's get a boat, and go there."

"Good show," mumbled Fernando, and the upshot was they acquired a very ancient and unseaworthy 24-foot gas boat misnamed Mermaid.

As Pat Brabazon explains it, in his Irish style, when they got out past Ogden Point they turned left instead of right. A day or so later they piled the Mermaid high and dry on Jones Island, just off Sidney.

As Fernando related later, they were marooned on a desert island. He failed to add, that they were also within sight and sound of the clam cannery at Sidney!

However they still had the dinghy, and the six of them piling in it, rowed in raggle-taggle style to Shell Island. Though there was no water on the island, luckily they had the forethought to bring along a case of gin. Which was their undoing, for as they worked their way through it, a fight started. Montagu accused a Mr. Forbes of being a mutineer, and counselled Mr. Brooks to knock him out. Which Mr. Brooks did. Then, to resuscitate the unfortunate Forbes, they tied a rope around his middle and towed him round the bay! What with the emousation and the sea water he swam back, Forbes spent a day or so in hospital in Victoria.

And it was in a Jubilee Hospital bed that he shakily inscribed his signature on an information

PLAYBOY ANTICS of LORD MONTAGU

(In the presence of Police Magistrate George Jay) that caused the court appearance of Brooks and Montagu.

Equipped with his rich Cork brogue, Tom Hurley defended Montagu, declaiming at one stage: "This is a wild charge! Let us return to sanity. This is Shell Island we're talking about, not Juan Fernandez. We are not dealing with Robinson Crusoe and his man Friday, neither are we considering another voyage of Ulysses. We are dealing with a charge against Lord Montagu."

Apparently the court had no difficulty in recognizing the fact.

Fernando got fined $50 or two months, and went off to Oahu. Montagu, nicked for $25 or a month, didn't have any money either. However toward the end of the day, a lady friend bailed him out.

I suppose there are still a few people around Victoria who remember these playboy antics, but not many know of Fernando's background.

When he was born, in 1906, his 29-year-old father, the 9th Duke of Manchester, was Captain of the Yeoman of the Guard in the Tower of London, which is a sort of "grace and favor" job within the royal prerogative. Hint of the connection is the fact that none other than King Edward VII was godfather to Fernando.

Through his father went to Eton, Fernando (like the poet Byron and Winston Churchill) went to Harrow. After schooling, perhaps exhibiting no sign of talent (and in addition having an older brother as heir to the dukedom) the Duke did the traditional thing, and shipped Fernando off to Canada. To Ontario as a matter of fact, where (at 23) he married a Miss Nora Foster. Eight years of marriage ended in divorce, then he married Dorothy Peters. This lasted a little longer, 18 years.

By CECIL CLARK

Aside from his many matrimonial ventures, Fernando lived a strange impulsive existence, and it was not long after the Shell Island escapade, that he hit the headlines again. This time it was in California, where he got himself involved with another queer set.

The upshot was a murder story that needed only Detective Ironside to complete the cast.

The lead this time was played by Captain Walter Wanderwell, a young and handsome globe-trotting addict of fortune who, by 1932, had been married seven years to his very beautiful wife, Aloha. They had two children, Valerio, 7, and six-year-old Nile.

That fall he bought a boat at auction, a great big ex-ran runner called the Carme. With it he hoped to cruise the South Seas.

Instead, however, of hiring two or three knowledgeable men for engine room and deck jobs, he accumulated a crew of nine women and six men.

Judging by the reports, they were as brisk a bunch of free-lancers as ever poured a drink... from someone else's bottle! The women ranged from a waitress (which was no sin) to an authoress, who should have known better. The men ran the gamut from an ex-prize fighter to... If you haven't already guessed... the second son of the Duke of Manchester.

It was on the night of Dec. 5, 1932, as the vessel was tied to a dock at San Diego, that some of those in the well-lit main saloon were conscious of a face peering in at one of the portholes. Seconds later the face retracted itself as belonging to a well set up young man in a gray flannel suit who, stepping in from the outer darkness, asked: "Where's the skipper?"

Someone, thinking the man was an electrician they were expecting, motioned toward the stern and said: "He's in his cabin aft." The man followed directions, and seconds later came the sound of a shot. One or two dashed aft and found Wanderwell sprawled on his cabin floor. Apparently he had been bending over a tin cash box, which was open on a small chest of drawers, when he was shot in the back of the head. In the midst of the excitement, the man in gray vanished.

At the time of the murder Aloha Wanderwell was in their Hollywood flat, although the two children were asleep on the vessel.

When the police investigated, Aloha dropped the hint that the shooting must have been the work of "Guy." She said that when her husband was shipping another pleasure yacht, off the coast of South American a couple of months back, he had a bit of mutiny among the crew. Figuring Guy was the ringleader, he put him ashore at Panama. Then, a week or so before the fatal shooting, said Mrs. Wanderwell, Guy turned up one night at their Hollywood flat and in a fight that followed nearly strangled Wanderwell.

Of course it didn't take the police long to get a picture of the suspect, identified by a wharf caretaker as having been around the dock both before and after the murder.

After quite a police search he was eventually rounded up in a lonely mountain hideout, and proved to be a 24-year-old Welshman called William James "Curly" Guy.

The investigation offered an additional problem to the police because of so many off-beat characters in the "crew." Some weren't too busy about disclosing their antecedents, which gave an additional air of mystery.

Chief problem however, was the motive for the killing. By the presence of the open cash box some thought Wanderwell was about to pay off the blackmailing Guy. Trouble with this theory, Wanderwell hadn't any money. In fact he only left an estate of $1,000. And why should a blackmailer kill the goose that laid the golden eggs?

To further baffle the investigators Guy produced witnesses to prove that he was 30 miles away on the night of the murder. On the other hand, six people on the boat definitely identified him as the man who came aboard asking for the skipper.

If both public and police were slightly puzzled, another queer antic added to the mystery. When Mrs. Wanderwell was notified of the killing at her Hollywood apartment, she hastened to the ship. When she arrived detectives noticed somehow that her main concern seemed to be the whereabouts of a little silver whistle Wanderwell was alleged to carry in his wallet.

Asked about her interest in the matter, she said, something about it being his "lucky whistle." The day he was parted from it, she added, was the day he would die. It got the police to thinking that the whistle was something the murderer was also interested in for the wallet was lying open beside his body and the whistle gone. Searching the vessel they finally found it lying between some coils of rope. As it was out on deck the murderer must have dropped it in the dark, and with the excitement below, didn't stop to hunt for it. It was all very queer.

And where, you will ask, does our friend Fernando figure in this. Matter of fact he was

AUTHENTIC TOTEM POLES HAVE DEEP MEANING

By LESLIE DREW
Editor, Prince Rupert Daily News

The last great stands of original totem poles—the heritage of five Gitksan villages in the upper Skeena River country on or near Highway 16—have a new lease on life.

These towering cedar poles, some of them 100 years old, are being restored on site by the Skeena Totem Pole Restoration Society with the permission of their owners and band councils in the native villages.

In the last four years $22,000 has been spent re-erecting poles that were insecure, listing or lying rotting. With about $20,000 more the task will be finished. Funds raised by the society, mostly gifts from business and industry, are matched by the provincial government.

When all the poles that can be restored again stand firm and proud, Highway 16 (the northern Trans-Provincial Highway) will have a tourist attraction par excellence. For these are authentic poles whose curious figures have deep meaning in the villages. Some, notably those at Kitwanoos, "rank with the finest poles ever carved," according to anthropologist Wilson Duff.

Led by Mrs. H. W. (Dolly) Sargent of Hazelton, the society began work in 1965 after long study, remounting 12 poles at Kispiox. The poles were treated with a chemical preservative and raised off concrete bases, braced by steel girders. Before, they had simply been planted in the ground, and base rot was common. On their new footings they are protected against grass fires.

In Kitwanoos, nestled up a tributary of the Skeena River, the task is tiding longer. Kitwanoos was the first of the Gitksan villages to adopt the art of totem pole carving, and many of its fine poles were very fragile. Nine were restored in 1966-67, four have yet to be done, and five including the old, ornate Hole in the Sky pole will probably be sheltered on site to slow deterioration by wind and rain.

Totem poles at Kitwanoos and Kitisnoo are in the best condition of all, having been attended to in earlier decades. At Kitwanoos eight need re-erection, at Kitisnoo six, and at Gitksan (Hazelton) three.

In buying time for the historic stands, the society sought advice from around the world as to how best to delay rot yet retain the poles' original, weather-beaten appearance. While nothing exists on the market to preserve wood forever in air, new substances have been invented since the society was formed and it had been quick to test them.

In the last heyday of totem pole carving, when feasting and ceremony attended every pole-raising, tradition dictated that the poles face water. On the British Columbia coast and in the Queen Charlotte Islands these man-made "forests" looked out to sea. The Gitksan poles faced the interior rivers, chiefly the Skeena, forming the impressive phalanxes that Emily Carr painted on her visits.

Today the remaining Kispiox poles that have been restored still face the upper Skeena. But at Kitwanoos the newly-mounted poles gaze inland, to the road through the village and snow-capped mountains beyond, their backs turned on Kitwanoos's waterway, the Kitwanoos River.

"This is the way the Kitwanoos people want it," Mrs. Sargent explains. "All their traffic now comes by road and not by canoe, so it's quite natural that their poles should turn to the road to greet their visitors."

CIRCUS JIM WAS CHIEF OF SHAKER INDIANS

Many times, when my father was away sealing, Mother would tell my brothers, Otto and Victor, and I stories of her life, and many a pleasant hour we whiled away in the Big House and the House on the Wharf in Esquimalt's West Bay, listening to her reminiscence.

She was born on a farm in Oak Ridge, Ont., and came out west with her parents when about seven years old. They lived in a little house on the corner of Broad and View Streets but were forced to move when the property was sold as the site of the new Grand Hotel, later considered to be the finest of its day in Victoria.

Her father, John McLean, was a blacksmith, and did all the iron work for the sailing ships and schooners that came into Victoria Harbor.

It was there she met Victor Jacobson when a young girl. His name really was Holmstrom but he had followed the practice of so many Scandinavian men when they came to this country, and changed his name to Jacobson, after his father, Jacob.

After their courtship they were married on Nov. 10, 1888. The Colonist of Nov. 11 reported the marriage thus: "At the First Presbyterian Church on Pandora Street last evening was celebrated the marriage of Capt. Victor Jacobson, one of the most successful sealing schooner owners, and Miss Miriam McLean, eldest daughter of Mr. John McLean and Annie McLean, of this city."

"The bride looked very pretty in a lovely dress of steel grey satin, veil and orange tulle, and was attended by Miss M. Sims who wore a dress of pink satin. The groom was ably supported by Capt. McKel."

"The ceremony was performed by the Rev. David Fraser in the presence of a large assemblage, the father giving the bride away. The wedding party proceeded to the residence of the bride's parents at the conclusion of the service, where a sumptuous wedding supper was partaken of. The bride and groom were the recipients of a large number of presents from their numerous friends, many of them of a costly and elegant character."

"Capt. Jacobson has been well and favorably known in Victoria for several years, and has prospered in his calling. Both he and his charming bride are deserving of every good luck, and have the sincere best wishes of a host of friends for prosperity and happiness during their wedded life."

During the early years of their marriage Mother used to accompany Father on his sealing trips around the west coast of Vancouver Island. Often, when he knew that the weather was going to be rough, he would leave her on shore, as she was not such a good sailor.

Father had bought the old Catholic church at Dodgers Cove, on Diana Island, Barclay Sound, which was the main village of the Ojibwa, a smaller band of the Nootka, and had made it into a dwelling for Mother, building several rooms, and also used it as a storehouse for his sealskins. The church had been built over an old Indian burial ground, but as the Indians were very superstitious they would not go to church there, so a new one had to be built elsewhere. Father bought it for very little.

Chief of the local band was Louis Nookomis. As most of the young men were with Father on the schooner, there were only the old men and women and children left in the village. Mother would spend a great deal of time with them, and made many friends amongst them.

Over the years she saw and heard many of the unusual customs and incidents of tribal life and we children used to thrill over her stories of the still primitive natives.

The Indians claimed their medicine men had hypnotic powers. Mother knew one of them; his name was Circus Jim. He was the chief of the Shaker Indians and lived at Chatham Bay. Mother often went with some of her Indian friends in their big canoes to his haunts there. He used to don a fancy costume and head-dress, which was a priest's mitre; where he got it from Mother never knew, but he was very proud of it.

He would start to chant, and as he did he would also start to shake, and then the Indians would follow suit, until they all were shaking. They would shake until Mother would think their limbs would fall off; even the children, until they finally went into a frenzy and began to roll on the ground and some of them fainted from sheer exhaustion.

Circus Jim used to claim he could do wonderful things, like sending messages for miles just by his own will. Mother had a remarkable experience herself, with regard to this.

It was many years later when Mother and Father were living on the old Distributor, the sternwheeler Father had bought and converted into a houseboat, in West Bay. The galley was situated on the main deck and had two doors, leading onto the deck, port and starboard, as on most ships, with windows alongside the doors. It was a winter night, dark and raining. Mother was getting supper ready.

Suddenly she felt that someone was looking at her through the window behind her. She turned, and there, framed in the window, was the face of an Indian she had never seen before. He had a bright red scarf around his neck and he was smiling at her. She went to the door and opened it.

But when she looked out there was not a soul in sight. She couldn't understand it, as she knew that she would have heard anyone walking along the deck. She went back to her work but watched the window this time. Then the face appeared again. Mother ran to the door and threw it open—and no one was there!

She went out on deck and circled the boat completely, but no one was in sight.

Later, when Father came home, she told him about it, and he laughed at her, telling her she had imagined it. However, three weeks later, she saw the face at the window again. But this time there was a knock on the door, and when she opened it there stood the Indian she had seen three weeks before, grinning face, red scarf and all. He was very much excited and he asked her if she would help him get the justice to go in search of Circus Jim's son, who had been missing for some time. Circus Jim had sent this Indian down from Chatham Bay, and told him to come straight to my mother.

Jim's son had married a girl from Seattle, and he had left Chatham Bay, in his fishboat, with a gift of deer for the wife's parents. Rough weather had set in, and he had not arrived. Circus Jim told the Indian that Mother would recognize him. She had never in her life seen the messenger before, nor had he seen her. He said he had never been in Victoria before, yet his was the face she had seen looking at her through the window three weeks before. Of course she knew that Circus Jim would claim that he had sent him to her in spirit so that she would know him when he did come. For that matter, maybe he had!

Whether this was a case of mental delinquency or not, I do not know. They found out later that Jim's son had gone overboard, in the rough weather, and had drowned.

The Indians had many queer customs; one of the strangest was that of disposing of their dead. They were put into a crude wooden box which was fastened into the branches of a tree, then all the dead man's worldly goods piled around the tree. It didn't matter that the departed's wife and children needed these things. If he had a dog it was tied to the tree, too, and left to starve. Then everything was left to be and rot away. Sometimes, if an elderly person became incapable of looking after himself, or was very ill, he was placed in the box and put up in the tree to die.

One day Mother and Father landed in the village at Uchucklet, to find all the Indians staring at an old man who was lying on the beach. He had gotten out of his box and had gone back to the village, and the Indians had said that he was dead, that the devil had entered his body so they were driving the devil out.

Father picked him up and took him aboard the schooner, but he died, so a second funeral was held for him with much wailing and noise.

If a baby or child became ill they immediately pummelled it to drive the devil out. The child invariably died.

They were very superstitious about births. Twins were considered a disgrace, and triplets a curse on the parents. One time when my parents were at Nitinat, they found a young Indian who was nearly dead from being stoned by the villagers. His wife had given birth to triplets, and he had been driven out of the village. They had meant to kill him, but he had escaped and hidden in the bush. No one would befriend him and the dogs, which were always vicious, were set upon him. They took him on board the schooner and fed him until he regained his strength. He was so terrified, they had to keep him hidden from the Indian crew. He was sure they would kill him.

When they landed they took him to the priest, who promised to look after him. They found out later that he was allowed to return, as two of the triplets had died, and the Indians had forgiven him.

The Indians usually killed one twin, or two if there were triplets, but it was considered a great disgrace if such a birth occurred in the village.

It was while Father's schooner, the Eva Marie, was anchored off Abnquat, with Capt. George Heaster's sealing schooner Arctian, waiting for the Indian hunters from the village, that all were invited to a wedding in the village.

There, half reclining in a canoe, just below the high tide mark, was an Indian, laughing and having the time of his life while the wedding was in progress. Mother and Father asked him why he didn't join the party on the beach. He explained that he was "dead."

He had been ill and had passed out, and the other Indians, thinking he was dead, two arms plucked off his blouse and made a box for him, but found the box was too small, so they broke both his legs and fitted the body in and fastened it up in a tree. It wasn't long before he came to and dragged himself to the village, but the others would not accept him, as he was supposed to be dead, so he crawled then to his canoe and paddled to Uchucklet where he was taken in by the tribe there, as he had married a girl from that village.

His legs finally healed but stayed stiff so that he could not sit in a canoe, but had to paddle lying down. He was allowed to come to the wedding at his own village of Abnquat, but had to stay below high tide mark or the others would have killed him. He was only 45-years-old.

It was also when Mother was on the Eva Marie that she saw a man swimming in the water off Clayquint, towards the schooner. Yous Hackett, who was aboard, picked him out of the water, and found he was in great pain, as both his arms and legs were broken. He, also, had had his arms and legs broken by the other Indians so that he could fit into the box when they thought he was dead, and taken to a small island near Matilda Bay where there was a lone tree, and his box put in the branches.

That night there was a severe storm, and the box was blown down and broken open, and he came to. The next morning he saw the schooner, and decided to make a swim for it. Father gave him some laudanum to ease his pain, and a hunter was sent to Clayquint in a sealing boat for the doctor, but by the time he arrived the Indian had died. He was then taken ashore to an isolated spot and buried, as Father knew the Indians wouldn't touch him as they would say that the devil had released him from his box.

JOHN'S DINGHY EFFORT MIMICRED ON FACE

John Takes to Saltchuck

Newspaper men are known to be inquisitive, knowledge-thirsty and, sometimes, downright nosy. That's why I wasn't surprised when Colonist Island Editor John Hogbin one day suggested I take him to Cowichan Bay.

You could hardly blame him. For one thing, I'd been telling him so much about Cowichan Bay in the past two or three months he must've figured it was the hottest fishing spot next to the local fish markets.

Another point is that John, having come from England via the Prairies, was extremely curious about salt water, boats, fishes and fish in B.C. Since he's also a movie camera expert, here was an excellent opportunity to learn a few things about the "saltchuck" and also get a few good shots.

Little did he know that I'd be the one to get the best shot of them all.

Our battle plan was simple. We'd take my 17-foot cabin cruiser and borrow a dinghy, which we'd tow behind us.

John's wife, Nancy, then would get into the dinghy and our Island Editor would take a number of movie-film sequences of her bobbing by her little lonesome on the waves of Cowichan Bay.

John's first mistake was that, like a good husband, he first wanted to test the dinghy.

We thought it was an excellent idea, but I made one singular error — I forgot to ask him whether he'd ever been in an eight-foot dinghy.

He hadn't.

And you can imagine what happened. The dinghy kept bobbing and weaving like a punch-drunk boxer, while John valiantly tried to use the oars.

Even though the big boat was towing the dinghy at a snail-like pace, it made rowing the small craft similar to swimming the Sarsam Narrows at rip tide.

I couldn't resist taking a few pictures, and when the Hogbin clan looks at them decades from now, they'll be able to say, "Here, but for the grace of God, go I."

One thing is certain — the next time John goes out in a dinghy he'll know how to propel it properly. And if he's being towed, he'll just sit tight.

By RAY KERR

The next step was to get pictures of his wife, Nancy, all by herself in a dinghy.

We placed her into it and shoved away, hoping she'd look lonely, abandoned and forlorn, for movies' sake.

She looked lonely, abandoned and forlorn, so much so we rushed the picture-taking sequence and quickly brought her back aboard.

If there's one thing I can't stand it's seeing a helpless female abandoned in the middle of the Pacific Ocean. Well, almost in the middle.

By then I was ready to take the dinghy to Rainbow Reef and feed it to the Maple Bay Monster that's supposed to lurk there.

But not John. He had to insist on getting himself and Nancy into the frail craft for more close-ups.

My wife and I left them on their own, but let me tell you, I felt like I was letting them go down the Hell's Gate Rapids in a 10-foot raft.

So they fooled me. They sat there, calm and determined with the camera grinding away, while other fishing experts passing by wondered if they were seeing things.

But John got his pictures, and that's the main thing.

The other part of the story was for me to show our Island Editor how fish are caught in the world-famous Cowichan Bay angling grounds.

I'd met with moderate success up to then, so I thought this would be a cinch.

It sure was. We trolled for something like four hours, the only bites in evidence being those of horse flies and assorted man-eating creatures.

John, meanwhile, was valiantly trying to line up for outstanding action shots of hard-fighting Cowichan Bay salmon battling inch-for-inch against a hard-bitten Island angler.

Well, he must've got pretty tired of waiting.

When the action did come, it came unexpectedly, and it was a kaleidoscope of surging lines, flashing silvery bodies, people getting in each other's way, general panic, and hardly any camera action.

We wound up with hoarse throats, parched skin and three beautiful salmon, one of them a pretty echo that fought like a Roman Legionnaire despite its meagre five pounds.

To me, that made it worth 10 fishing trips.

But I had my misgivings about our Island Editor. After all, he missed the best fishing spots, picked up a sunburn, and might've got seasick in the silly dinghy.

I therefore waited until I saw he was in a good mood, the following week, before I asked him how he liked the whole thing.

"We must do the whole thing all over again," he said nonchalantly.

"And soon."

From now on if anyone tells me a fishing greenhorn will take a lot of getting used to the saltchuck, I'll put him in that same dinghy.

Then I'll let him loose in Sarsam Narrows.

By D. ELLIS

The first time I went to Alta Lake, which is situated in the Coast Range, 35 miles north of Squamish, was with my father, my brother Dean and his friend, Dan. Of that first trip the things I can remember most were those things that were old or very beautiful, as I was only 10 years old at the time.

I will always remember our first view of the mountains on the east side of the valley when we got off the train that beautiful summer morning. Whistler, Blackcombe, Wedge and Armchair were their names. Wedge, higher than 9,400 feet, was the highest peak for many miles around.

We were complete strangers in this area, so we started to walk down the railroad track to a lodge where we hoped we could rent a boat. There we rented a leaky boat from Cypress Lodge, and rowed the half mile across the lake. As we rowed we saw another much older lodge on the lakeshore, a long row of rustic cabins on a peninsula just above the level of the lake.

After we had a swim we got into the boat again and went down a stream flowing out the north end of the lake. The River of Golden Dreams we later learned it was called, and a beautiful stream it was, with low brush on both sides, lily pads everywhere, and fish plentiful.

We tied up our boat at an old dock beside a bridge and began to look for a spot to camp. We found one down the road a little, underneath a huge pine. In the evening we went back to the creek to fish and had average luck.

That night we slept well, with the soft pine needles beneath us. To our amazement we woke in the morning to the crowing of a rooster. After breakfast we hid our camping equipment in the bush and set off up the road with fishing tackle and lunch. As we walked along the road, we suddenly emerged from the dense bush, and came upon a farm.

It was a very old farm and all the buildings were aged and darkened by the weather. In front of the house we could see the vegetable garden, and in the fields a horse grazed. Save for the occasional crowing of a rooster, the farm was silent, and the only movement we could see, besides that of the horse, was the smoke drifting quickly out of the stovepipe. We could see the farm was past its prime, and had known more prosperous days.

We walked down past the farm, and a forest ranger soon came along with his Jeep. He took us to Lost Lake, about a mile away, where we spent the first half of the day fishing and swimming. Later, we came down from the lake, and went fishing in the River of Golden Dreams, near the Pacific Great Eastern tracks. After wading up to our chests—up to my chest anyway—in the stream we discovered a beautiful trout pond where we caught a dozen rainbow trout. On our way back to camp we saw a large black bear lumber across the tracks in front of us. That evening we fished in the river again, and the next day rowed across the lake and went home on the evening train.

It was not until the next trip up to the lake that we met the Tapleys, owners of the old farm, and not until much later that we met the Phillips, founders of Rainbow Lodge, the old lodge we had seen on the lake. After that first visit, we often went to visit the Tapleys. Mr. Tapley could tell many tales of the old days and we gradually learned the history of the Tapley Ranch.

Mr. Tapley had operated a pack-train between Squamish and Pemberton in 1912, when the PGE was partially built.

He had a string of 13 horses, each carrying 250-300 pounds, using the old trail the Indians had originally travelled. But when the railway was completed in 1914, the packing business became unprofitable. So he turned to odd jobs, and later,

PIONEERS of ALTA LAKE

It is hard for the Phillips and the Tapleys to realize, but their wilderness paradise is destined to become big resort area when fur prices rose, he went trapping. He ran a 10-mile trapline on the Manquam River near Squamish for a few years. Like most trappers, he can tell hair-raising stories of his adventures.

One winter he encountered the animal the trapper hates most on his line — the wolverine, which will eat the animals caught and even bury the traps. He had a hard time catching it too, for it avoided poisons and could pull out of a No. 4 trap, which is large enough to catch and hold a wolf. Eventually he caught the wolverine with a bear trap baited with 40 pounds of horsemeat. On another occasion he was caught in a dreaded "white-out" while out on his trapline, and walked over a bluff. But fortunately he landed in the soft snow and was not hurt badly.

In 1935, the Tapleys were married and settled on the ranch, where they have been ever since. They gradually cleared more land until they had a productive farm, with many different crops. Lovers of all animals, they also kept livestock. When their last old horse died a couple of years ago they used it to the end and, setting a trap near the carcass, caught a young wolverine.

Last year Mrs. Tapley was awarded the Centennial Pioneer's Medal, the only one awarded in the area. Both nearing 80, the Tapleys still cling to their farm and their independence, although they now have only a few chickens and their cats left for company. Their only child, a daughter, is married and lives in Vancouver.

Few people live as close to nature as the Tapleys. Mr. Tapley himself will say, looking past you to his fields: "There's no life like livin' off the land."

We learned the Phillips' story too. At one time they operated a restaurant in Vancouver. Discovering Alta Lake in 1911 while on a fishing trip, they bought a small piece of land in 1913, and in May of 1914 began to build Rainbow Lodge. They had finished the main building by the following spring, when the newly completed PGE Railway ran a "fishermen's special" to Alta Lake.

Despite lack of brains the fishing was good and the word soon spread to Vancouver of the fabulous fishing at Alta Lake. The Phillips kept a large garden plot the first few years, but soon they were too busy for it, and spent most of their time working on the lodge. Every year they added a cabin or two. Rainbow Lodge soon became very popular, not only with fishermen, but with honeymooners.

A special open railway car ran from Squamish to Rainbow Lodge, and weekend excursions from Vancouver were very popular. Mr. Phillips also wrote a number of books, among them The Crimson West and The Painted Cliff. One of his books was made into a successful movie. When they sold their lodge in 1948, Rainbow Lodge consisted of 41 buildings. Mrs. Phillips, now in her late 70s, and Mr. Phillips, almost 86, are still very happy to talk of the old days in their comfortable house near Cypress Lodge.

Mrs. Phillips is still actively engaged on the Squamish and District School Board. As the oldest residents of Alta Lake, the Phillips were given the honor of throwing the switch that brought hydro power to Alta Lake in 1965.

The Phillips and Tapleys can remember many pioneers who have either died or left the area. Among them the Chaundlers and the Mitchells, the people who first pre-empted the Rainbow Lodge land and the Tapley Ranch, the Horstmanns, the Archibalds, the Getharths, and Wiedars. All these people first pre-empted land from the government — that is, were allowed to possess the land if they cleared five acres.

Both the Phillips and Tapleys remember well the Texan, John Miller. He had many different occupations — cask, farmer, trapper. His face was scarred from many fights. He once trapped a wolverine, and after he had "killed" it with his axe he tossed it into his pack, only to have it recover, eat through the pack and clamp its jaws on the seat of his pants!

Billy Baliff, however, was no greenhorn trapper. An expert at staying in the woods for long periods of time during the winter, Baliff built snug cabins at both ends of Cheakamus Lake, which are still as sturdy today as they were 40 years ago. He also trapped for up Callaghan Creek and, building himself a shelter of tarpaper and branches, was able to sleep out for five weeks at a time.

Coming to Alta Lake in 1945, Dick Fairhurst, who built Cypress Lodge, learned many tricks from Billy Baliff. Fairhurst too had his moments of danger while trapping. Once, while making a tree set 16 miles from home up Fitzsimmons Creek, he became careless for a second, lost time enough for his axe to glance off a frozen tree and cut into the bone of his left leg. Somehow, after what must have been a terrible ordeal, he managed to get home. Then, after being in bed two weeks, he went back up and finished setting out his traps! A few years later fur prices dropped, and trapping, which had at one time been a profitable pursuit, lost importance.

Today the Alta Lake area is opening up quickly to settlement with the new road from Squamish to Pemberton. The new skiing development on Whistler Mountain has attracted many to the area interested in winter recreation. There are even hopes that some day the area will be the site of the Winter Olympics.

It is hard for the Phillips and Tapleys to imagine, but some day the area will become a large skiing centre with hotels and ski-lifts everywhere. The peace of the old Alta Lake that they know is passing into time now. Soon it will not be such an adventure to discover as when we did, when everything seemed very old and very beautiful.

GREAT VOLUNTEER CAPER

I was two years, six months and one week old on Aug. 15, 1947, when India kept her "tryst with destiny" and the Union Jack came down for the last time. As I recall, I was not impressed.

I was aware of India quite early. We lived on Sutlej Street in South Fairfield and, besides, I had an uncle there. Letters with dingy stamps used occasionally to come through the letter box. I met the uncle when I was six, but as he seemed very much like any other uncle, I decided to let India go its own way for the time being.

My first real consciousness of India came in the mid-1950s: Krishna Menon on television haranguing the United Nations; the awkward scene of leaving there was a Communist government in Kerala and then finding Kerala on the map; and finally, some magnificent study books in the basement: History of the British Army, With Clive in India, Memories of the Marathas.

It was the books that came first, hauled out of a tin trunk one rainy winter night in an effort to entertain me. They did. I followed Clive and Arthur Wellesley, Sir Colin Campbell and Roberts, to Arcot and Seringapatam, to Lucknow and Kabul. It was grand stuff. The villains—Burrhaddulla, Tipu Sultan, Nana Sahib—had names mysterious and hearts of steel; the heroes were lily white, brushed their teeth after every battle and had names like the next-door neighbor. It wasn't difficult to identify with them.

Later, I became slightly suspicious of imperialism, discovered Kipling, met the uncle again, read regularly of starving Indian millions and heard that India had a quarter or a fifth of the world's population (the figure doesn't matter, but it impressed me immensely). Then came the invasion of Goa, the Chinese attack in 1962, the death of Nehru and the war with Pakistan in 1965. These facts and feelings, plus the Indian rape trick, Ugers, mudhuts, jaghah, the Taj Mahal and a hazy notion of princely oriental splendour gleaned from Errol Flynn movies on the late show, represented my knowledge of India when I decided to come here.

Rather, I should say that it was this knowledge which prompted me to choose India when I decided to become involved in the Great Volunteer Caper. But it's difficult to assign motives; partly I became a volunteer because I wanted to see India; partly I decided on being a volunteer, then chose India because I thought I had a "feeling" for it. What a feeling.

At any rate, I had done 17 consecutive years of school and wanted to do something different, something that wouldn't commit me to a pension plan, a 9-to-5 job, a split-level house and wife and a gold watch on retirement 10 years hence. Then, too, there was a vague idealism, no better defined than the picture of Errol Flynn on the Persian rug clapping for the dancing girls, which saw me featured in the Star Weekly (what higher recognition could a man desire?) surrounded by happy orphan babies and credited with saving India (from what, I was never quite certain, but it was a nice picture and I didn't ask questions).

But this motivation was probably not so different from that of other volunteers from western countries in the last 10 years. Indeed, it was probably not so different from that which sent out the "pukka sahibs" to take up the White Man's Burden 100 years ago.

At this point, though, it might be a good idea to say something about the Great Volunteer Former Colonel staffer Robin Jeffrey is in India with the Canadian University Service Overseas. This is the first of several stories in which he will give his impressions of India and tell about his work in that developing country.

Caper. To many people, the word "volunteer" is a trifle offensive; it suggests, they say, something of the Foreign Legion. And the Great Volunteer Caper is not like the Foreign Legion.

The best-known volunteer agency is the Peace Corps, set up in 1961 at the instigation of President Kennedy. It now numbers its volunteers and former volunteers in six figures. However, the Peace Corps wasn't the first of the volunteer agencies; the Voluntary Service Overseas was founded in Britain in 1958. The Canadian University Service Overseas started in 1961 and now has about 900 active volunteers. West Germany, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Australia and New Zealand also have volunteer services.

The idea behind the volunteer agencies was to use the idealism, talent and desire-for-something-different of the first 20th-century generation that had not had to fight a war. Put people with skills into developing countries ("underdeveloped" is a dirty word), pay them the same wage as their local counterparts and let them make friends, complement the local resources of talent and provide impetus for development programs. That was the thinking, anyway.

Of course, it hasn't always worked like that.

Volunteering has appealed primarily to just-graduated bachelors of arts, and there are few things which a developing country (particularly one like India which cranks out BAs at an alarming rate) needs less than BAs. The agriculturalists, the foresters, the silversmiths and especially the experienced industrial workers have not been available.

The Peace Corps set up three-month crash courses to turn BAs into chicken farmers (and sometimes, one suspects, chicken farmers into BAs) or well drillers. One Peace Corps friend began his career in India as a chicken farmer in a village and finished as an artist in a family-planning centre.

Moreover, the friendship-and-understanding goal has not always been realized. One "incident," one bad volunteer, can queer the pitch for everybody. And the "incident" nearly always makes the newspapers. In India, for example, one communist weekly newspaper delights in linking the Peace Corps and the CIA; Peace Corps blunders, real or imagined, are almost a regular feature.

Another criticism of the volunteer agencies comes from within their own countries. This was expressed in an article in The Ubyssey, the University of British Columbia newspaper, last winter. "Middle class values are the anonymous collection of attitudes on which CUSO is founded ... CUSO policy has a middle class bias and so do CUSO volunteers." The complaint is that the volunteer agencies are expanding the middle class way of life.

It is probably a just criticism. I haven't met many revolutionaries. Most developing countries produce enough rebels and dissidents of their own; they don't need to import.

However, it is true that a volunteer can lead a disgustingly middle class life. Indeed, he may have a servant. But, in India at any rate, his colleagues would think it odd if he did not; many of them have servants too even if only the traditional sweeper.

For all his middle class vices, though, the volunteer is not a "sahib," and that is probably the best reason for his existence.

"In Malaysia," one CUSO teacher told me, "we had British VSO cadets (high school gradu-

LET US BE THANKFUL...

for the bounty of the land and the goodness of God.

Once again it is that lovely and savory time of the year. How fortunate we are to live in this land of plenty... not only food but all the other good things of life. With world tension at an all-time high and with hunger stalking many areas of the world, we in Canada can surely count our blessings. Lord we do give Thee thanks for the abundance that is ours.

The celebrants of the first Thanksgiving put the emphasis on food because of the garnered harvest. Ever since that time we have celebrated the day with a festive meal and with an abundance of good things to eat. Much of the "dainties" of our Thanksgivings are traditional and perhaps the most traditional thing of all is the fragrance in our kitchens. It wouldn't be Thanksgiving without the fragrance of turkey roasting in the oven and the spiciness of mince and pumpkin pie. The redolence of herbs and spices spell Thanksgiving.

At this time of year the spotlight is on the spice shelf... besides individual spices there are the spice blends. These blends, like poultry seasoning, are a skillfully balanced combination of herbs and spices all ready mixed into a single powder. The poultry seasoning contains sage, thyme, marjoram and savory, and sometimes rosemary and other spices. This is much handier to use than measuring separate spices. It is ideal for stuffings for either chicken or turkey.

Although most often used in stuffings for chicken and turkey, poultry seasoning is fine for fish stuffings and many other dishes... use a teaspoonful and a little paprika in a meatloaf made with a pound of ground beef or pork. Rub it into the fat of a fresh pork roast before roasting it in the oven. Add a little poultry seasoning to the fish butter before frying. It's also a delicious flavor surprise when added to the crust and filling of turkey or chicken pie when you come to the holiday leftovers.

No matter if you are having turkey, chicken or a fine roast of pork for Thanksgiving dinner Apple Bread Stuffing in a Casserole is a fine addition to the meal or whenever you want extra stuffing.

CASSEROLE APPLE BREAD STUFFING

... 6 cups toasted bread cubes, 3 cups sliced apples, 1/2 cup each onion flakes and celery flakes, 1/4 cup butter or margarine, 3 tsp. poultry seasoning, 1 1/2 tsp. salt, 1 tsp. parsley flakes, 1/4 to 1 cup stock, apple juice or water.

Combine bread cubes and apples in a large mixing bowl. Mix onion and celery flakes with the 1/4 cup liquid and let stand 5 minutes. Melt the 1/4 cup butter for 5 minutes. Add to bread apple mixture with remaining ingredients. Mix well. Place in buttered casserole (3 quart). Dot with additional butter or margarine. Bake covered in a preheated oven for about 30 minutes. Fresh onion and celery may be used if you do not have the dehydrated products on hand.

At Haunted Victoria Appearance

MADAME ANNA SANG WITH BROKEN HEART

By T. W. PATERSON

Men wept unashamedly, women swooned and young gentlemen about town threw kisses and flowers when Madame Anna Bishop, the toast of three continents, sang. With her wistful Home, Sweet Home, the heart-rending My Bud in Heaven, and the carefree Dashing White Sergeant, Madame Bishop captivated thousands from London to Melbourne to San Francisco for half a century. Honors, fortunes—and tragedy—formed the remarkable career of this remarkable lady; a true prima donna.

When finally the famous lady of song visited Victoria in 1873, the old Theatre Royal was packed for 10 glittering nights. Ironically, few of her enthusiastic audiences could have realized that anything was amiss; that the great Madame Anna faced them with a broken heart. Her beautiful voice never faltered, her features never for an instant betrayed her secret. Yet Victoria meant the sorrow of a lifetime to the beloved vocalist.

This the fascinating tragedy which, but for the alert eye of David W. Higgins, pioneer journalist, might have passed unrecorded. Long after the prima donna's death, Mr. Higgins told her and story which had begun 35 years before her haunted appearance in Victoria.

"In the month of Dec., 1837," he began, "musical circles of London were excited by the announcement that a new star of the first magnitude had been discovered in the musical firmament and that it was about to dazzle the public eye with beauty and grace and pure accomplishment as a vocalist.

"It was given out that the lady was very young; that she was a favorite pupil of Mr. (afterwards Sir) Henry Bishop, the famed composer, and that under his auspices and tutelage she would appear. The place selected for the debut of the talented young lady was Covent Garden Theatre, and when the evening arrived the reader may be sure that the building was thronged by an eager and expectant audience. All the courted darlings, the glided youths and the belles of London society were there.

"Royalty, no doubt, honored the performance with its presence and the brilliant scintillations from a thousand gas jets, the display of rich and lovely gowns, and the glitter of costly diamonds must have captivated the senses and dazzled the eyes of those who were so fortunate as to gain admittance.

"The new prima donna had scarcely sung a dozen lines of the score before the audience was entranced, and as the sweet notes died away and the timid, trembling debutante, all aglow with pleasure and excitement and a sense that she had achieved a great triumph, advanced to receive the ovation of the vast assemblage of men and women (who) rose to their feet, waved their handkerchiefs, and cheered in approval, while bouquets composed of the choicest flowers rained about her from all parts of the house.

The lovely singer was an instant success, "her animated style, her sweet and youthful face and her bashful manner, combined with her musical power and range," making her a national idol.

Men with titles threw themselves at her feet, the "doors of the best society were thrown open," audiences showered her with applause and bouquets. One enthusiastic crowd even unhitched her team and pulled her carriage all the way home from the theatre.

But all would-be suitors met with defeat, for Anna's heart had been won by her tutor, Henry Bishop. Although 30 years her senior and "by no means a handsome man . . . noted for his irritability and extravagant habits," the famous composer had courted and conquered his "young and irresistible" protégée. Throughout England, eligible bachelors mourned her unlikely choice. Few considered the match a "love one," and all predicted disaster. Sadly, they were to prove prophetic.

Their troubles began soon after the ceremony. Bishop was "set in the ways and habits he had acquired while leading a latterly existence. His wife, who was young, ardent and impulsive, had no idea of adapting herself to the tastes of her husband. She liked young company, while Mr. Bishop's tastes led him into older society. His wife had views and aspirations with which he had no sympathy."

In due course, Mme. Bishop gave birth to a daughter, and "for a time the joys of motherhood absorbed" her attention. But not for long. Even knighthood failed to slow her restless husband, who, between compositions and teaching at the University of Edinburgh, squandered the large fortune she had earned on stage.

More years "passed in disharmony," continued Mr. Higgins, "when there joined the company of which Lady Bishop was the prima donna an elderly Hungarian harpist named Bocksha (I am not sure that this name is correctly spelled, but it was pronounced Boker).

"The two were thrown much together. Bocksha was older than Bishop. He was at least 60 years of age. His long, white hair brushed from his forehead fell in graceful folds upon his shoulders and imparted a picturesque and a classical appearance to his intellectual features. He was the greatest performer on the harp of his day—perhaps the best."

Finally came the day when London society was "shaken to its foundations" by the news Lady Bishop and Bocksha had vanished. When days passed without sign of the missing couple, there were hints of foul play, suicide, said some. Weeks later, the truth swept both continents: Madame Anna Bishop, as she now called herself, and Bocksha had fled to New York, formed an opera company, and were touring the East. Despite—or perhaps because of—the international scandal, the company was "well received and made much money." Several years passed, the company touring as far as California, Mme. Bishop's fame growing steadily. In London, Sir Henry at last abandoned his wilder pursuits, devoting himself to music and his young daughter.

In 1854 Bocksha died in St. Louis. A year later, Sir Henry died in England. During a second visit to San Francisco, Mme. Bishop met and married a prosperous auctioneer named Schultz, "a bright and pleasant little man and a general favorite" in the Bay City.

Even the newfangleds and company sailed for Australia, Mme. Bishop eager for new conquests. The voyage became disaster when their ship struck a reef. Passengers and crew, many of the women wearing nothing but nightgowns, had just sunk enough to lower the boats. Then began a 700-mile voyage into hell. When at last they were rescued, several had succumbed to exposure. Landed at Melbourne, the Schultzes were destitute and almost naked. Gone were Mme. Bishop's expensive Paris gowns and 6,000 pound worth of jewelry.

Her renowned voice came to their rescue. After a few concerts they were "on their financial feet once more." This accomplished, they sailed for England to satisfy a years-long desire by Mme. Bishop to find her daughter. She learned Sir Henry had died destitute, having spent his own fortune and hers. But of her daughter, now a young woman, she was able to learn only that she had married a man named Blackford and had emigrated to Australia.

Disheartened, the singer returned to America for another successful tour of major cities before reaching San Francisco in 1869. After concerts throughout California and Oregon she arrived in Victoria, where Mr. Higgins met the famed star.

"She was indeed a most agreeable woman," he recalled. "No longer young she still bore the marks of great beauty. Her manners were gracious and courtly and all who met her carried away the impression that Madame Anna Bishop was a perfect lady who had been deceived and wronged into marriage and who finally fled to avoid the persecution and rapacity of her husband (Henry)."

Indicating Victorians had long memories.

Although in her mid-fifties, her voice "was sweet and full and showed but a few signs of wear. Her rendition of Last Rose and Home, Sweet Home, and Suwanee River was marvellous. The audience demanded repetition after repetition and when the last notes died away and the curtain fell, many retained their seats and cheered for some minutes in the vain hope that the diva would sing once more."

It so happened that a popular couple of Victoria society at that time was named Blackford. By a quirk of fate, it was Mme. Bishop's daughter and her husband, who had come to the colony from Australia as a member of Governor Arthur Kennedy's staff.

"The consternation of the Blackfords upon learning that the mother of Mrs. Blackford was in Victoria was great. It was first intended that the family should cross the Sound and stay there while the singer remained here. But it was finally resolved to stay in Victoria."

Somewhat, word of Mrs. Blackford's identity leaked out. Within hours, one of the bolder gossips had informed Mme. Bishop. "The Madame listened to the information with a face of stone. Not a muscle moved, not a lid quivered when she was told that her long-lost daughter was within reach. She asked no questions, thanked the lady with that grace and ease for which she was distinguished and did not refer to the matter again."

The same evening, she thrilled the overflowing audience as she had so many thousands of times before. And again each following performance, without betraying the slightest evidence of emotion. Then it was the last night; Theatre Royal was "overcrowded," but the box usually occupied by the Blackfords was empty. At last the curtain fell, to a standing ovation, the engagement was completed, and Mme. Bishop returned to her luxurious suite in the St. George's Hotel.

Minutes later, a heavily veiled woman left the hotel, hailed a cab and ordered the driver to an address on Michigan Street. Upon arrival, she asked him to wait, she approached the house and "agitated the knocker timidly." Moments later, a man answered.

From the street, the driver watched a mysterious scene, fascinated. The man and woman conversed for some minutes when the visitor dramatically threw back her veil, to reveal herself as Mme. Bishop. Apparently the man did not recognize her for he gave no sign of surprise at being visited at midnight by the famous singer. He moved to close the door, when she burst into tears. Touched, Mr. Blackford relented. They talked some more when, again, Blackford moved as if to shut the door. Suddenly the singer, now almost hysterical, threw herself bodily into the doorway. Angered, Blackford pushed her outside, alarmed and bolted the door.

Madame Bishop "battered down the steps, and almost fell on the gravelled walk. She clutched the railing to save herself and resting her poor old head on her arms, sobbed as if her overloaded heart would burst."

When the cab driver hastened to her side, she moaned: "Oh, for but one look at my bonnie's face—the bonnie that I nursed in her infancy and that I have pressed to my heart and blessed in her sleeping and in her waking moments.

"Indeed, indeed, it is not my fault that I left her. I was driven away by ill-treatment. She is in there—there where the light shines behind the curtain. I must, I will see her. Come, driver, help me to burst in the door!"

Restraining his hysterical fare, the nervous cabbie finally convinced her she should return to her hotel. The following day, Mme. Bishop "appeared on the street . . . as self-possession as ever and never referred to the incident or to her daughter again."

Then the company continued its tour, sailing for New Westminster. Four years later, the tragic lady returned to Victoria for a 10-night engagement. Once again she "spellbound" city society. But, Mr. Higgins recounted 30 years after, "her voice showed signs of failing."

"She went from here to England. She sang in cheap theatres, and at her final appearance in 1884 she was greeted with catcalls and vegetables from the gallery and was driven from the stage. Of all the brilliant things who in 1837 went mad over the beautiful girl and her sweet notes there were none to do her reverence or protect her from insult. She had become a sport and guy (sic) for the rough elements that frequent low places of amusement, and the sun had gone down forever on her fame. Such is life!"

Retiring from the stage at last, Mme. Bishop gave music lessons, dying in 1888, a "gifted and much misunderstood woman, feeble and old and worn out . . . in a foreign land."

What became of Mr. and Mrs. Blackford, Mr. Higgins did not say.

Kae Massey leads an interesting life. There are some folks who can go right through life from beginning to end, and have little or no adventure to show for all their years of living. Others there are who find life itself an adventure. And that is how it is with Kae. If she lives to be 100, she will probably still be marveling at the wonders of existence.

From Ships to Shades

By MARGARET S. BELFORD

Mrs. Kae Massey, born Katharine Albany here in Victoria, which has been her home off and on ever since, has managed to do a heap of living, and always with a difference. Even her Christian name is spelled with a difference. It is spelled with an 'ar' instead of an 'er', for Kae is named for her English grandmother. Her other grandmother who was Scots came out from Scotland to California with her family at the age of six. And, at the age of nine, she came to Vancouver Island to keep house for Kae's great-grandfather in a log cabin near Cowichan.

Kae's history might be said to stretch from sea to sea, just like Canada herself, for her grandfather, Robert Cavin, was born at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea, New Brunswick. And his father came out from Ireland in 1824. He is remembered by the family as the man who helped to build Green Oak Park at St. Andrews-by-the-Sea.

Reaching a little nearer to our part of the world was Kae's great-uncle, Captain George Cavin, and his wife Charity Brown. For Captain George Cavin was, at one time, master of the Beaver, the ship which was so much part of the history of these waters.

Kae herself looks back on a happy childhood spent in Victoria, when Victoria was, say 50-odd years younger than she is today. She remembers the night the old gas burned down. It stood on the hill now occupied by the S. J. Willis School, and was well-known landmark. That fire occurred in 1912, and the small Kae, who was suffering from pneumonia at the time, was in bed with a mustard plaster on her chest. A grown-up came running in calling: "Look, Katie, the gas is burning."

But the uncomfortable little girl replied: "It isn't the gas. It's my chest is burning."

The paving of Quadra Street was another high point for Kae, and she also remembers that when she first went to school, her schoolroom was a large tent on Quadra at Finlayson. She doesn't think that the children were unduly cold doing their lessons in the tent during the winter, since she is sure they were harder in those days. She does recall, however, that her beloved teacher was a Miss Lee, and that the older boys had a mischievous habit of sneaking outside to loosen the tent ropes in the hope of collapsing the tent!

Other memories include the big storm in 1916 which closed her school for three weeks; street car rides along Quadra; and the night of Johnson Street running red with catsup in 1914, as usually some citizens took it upon themselves to break into warehouses and smash the Heinz bottle because of their German name.

And lastly, Kae remembers that when Spencer's Stores celebrated their Diamond Jubilee in 1933, in what is now Eaton's they took over all the B.C. Electric street cars, and everybody in town rode free for that day, courtesy of Spencer's. Kae and her family took the Interurban all the way from Douglas Street to Deep Cove and back by way of celebration.

But that is all in the past. Since that time, Kae has, of course, followed the usual pattern of marriage and family. When her daughter was old enough to be independent, Kae, finding herself alone and in need of a job, joined the CPR boats plying between Vancouver and Alaska. She recalls that her first boat was the Princess Elizabeth which used to leave Vancouver on the Monday night and journey up the coast, calling in at Westview, Ocean Falls, Kitimat, and Prince Rupert before reaching Ketchikan on the Friday night. The boat stayed there for several hours before making the return trip.

Kae loved those trips when she did everything from running the ship's gift shop to baby-sitting;

... with hanging lamp in shape of bunch grapes.

Of course, she was not always on the same boat, nor on the same route. But whether sailing from Vancouver to Ketchikan, or from Nanaimo to Vancouver, or from Victoria to Seattle, Kae Massey loved being at sea. A proof of this love lies in the fact that she has been on the job now for the past 16 years, and though her health is not as good as it once was, the CPR still calls on her on a part-time basis, for trips between Nanaimo and Vancouver.

These trips, which were pleasure cruises to the tourists, were not without their 'adams and excursions' to the crew. Kae recalls the time when, just outside the Dawn Entrance, the ship came to a dead halt with rudder trouble. This is an area noted for its rough seas and sudden, violent storms, and Kae says that as the repairs took several hours, she certainly put up a strong prayer to the Almighty on that occasion. However, the Almighty took heed, and the rudder was repaired while the seas, for once, remained as calm as a mill-pond.

On another occasion on the same run, when Kae was sailing with the Princess Norah, they did run into a terrific storm which broke with the full force of an explosion in the early hours of the morning. Kae was tilted out of her bunk and deposited on the deck. Broken china and glass was everywhere, and this doughty woman member of the crew has a strong recollection of trotting around in her bedroom slippers and dressing-gown with a large mop in her hand, trying to mop up the worst of the mess before too much damage was done.

They were wonderful days and wonderful times for Kae Massey. With her zest for life, she enjoyed it all and made a host of friends on the way. She did not even care that, in order to get a good night's sleep, she had to open the cupboard door, and sleep with her feet in the cupboard because her bunk was otherwise too short for her tall body.

But even the most ardent seaman dreams of a snug little home in port. Kae was no exception, and about five years ago, she found the place of her dreams out in Colquitz. At first sight, the price seemed to put it right out of reach for Kae, but she is not one to be easily discouraged. She had found the home of her dreams, and she meant to have it for her own. With what she had already saved she managed, by the end of the tourist season, to make enough for the down payment. Then, by working hard, and renting the house until she was ready to live in it herself, she finally was able to make it her own.

So, now Mrs. Massey has her dream home and into it she has packed off her antiques and memories. She has her beautiful garden which slopes down to the Colquitz, where she can watch the swans gliding by on the stream. But is this enough for the energetic Kae? Not by any means. Even two days a week spent on the Princess boat plying from Nanaimo to Vancouver is not enough to satisfy this lively lady. So, how else to occupy her time?

Looking back, Kae remembered that during her marriage when her daughter was small, she had got great enjoyment out of teaching handicrafts around town. "I just love being busy with my hands," she will say. "Working in my garden and creating beautiful things with my hands are my two greatest interests nowadays." And it is that interest in handicrafts which finds her now running a fascinating store in town with the help of a young partner who is equally dedicated to craft work of all kinds.

One may buy the makings of all kinds of craftwork in this store. One may also get free lessons in how to make many beautiful things. However, the type of craft this store most specializes in is resin work — anything from brooches and ornaments, to the most beautiful and colorful lamps and lamp shades.

For Kae, the interest in resin work dates back to the Seattle World's Fair where she first saw examples of this new type of decorating. At that time, there was no possibility of amateurs following this craft. Later, however, the necessary materials did go on the public market and, as you may imagine, Kae Massey was right in there from the ground floor up.

To start with, Kae was content to make her beautiful lamp shades just for the fun of it. But she is also a teacher. She wanted a chance to share her knowledge and the beauty that went with it. Therefore, it might almost have been the answer to a prayer when Carole Todd came knocking at her door.

Carole Todd, another Victoria-born craft enthusiast, had set herself a Centennial project. For five years she had been collecting chips of colored glass from the beaches. This glass is not only colorful, but when it has been in the sea long enough, the constant movement of the tides and the sands smooths off the sharp edges, and makes it ideal for use in mosaics. Mrs. Todd, with her collection of chips, was determined to make a mosaic table top to commemorate Canada's Centennial.

The end result, however, was quite a bit less satisfying than Carole has hoped. Something was lacking, and her table top did not have the smooth finished look she had anticipated. Nothing she did seemed to give the answer. Then she heard about Mrs. Massey and her resin work. Maybe, resin was the answer. Colored glass set in resin.

So, out to Colquitz Avenue went Carole to find out about resin work and how to do it. And what started out to be a normal quest for information ended in the partnership which is flourishing today.

Carole and Kae soon found that they had a lot in common, and the result was a suggestion from Kae that Carole might consider going into partnership with her if they could find a suitable store in which to display their handicrafts. Carole was enchanted with the idea, especially as she felt that her husband was beginning to notice that the smell of paints and resins was an all-pervading one in their home.

So, these two busy people went into partnership together, and certainly they wasted no time about it, for Kae only moved into her house in September of 1967, and by Nov. 1, the two of them opened their Craft House for business. As Kae puts it, they get on very well together, and she thinks they are well matched for, though Carole has a husband and four young children, and Kae still has affiliations with the CPR, yet they manage between them to run a fascinating business.

In Craft House one can buy just about anything from resin moulds and raw resin and the metal frames which are the base of these very modern and colorful lampshades, to bright packages of butterfly wings. And in between these are such items as sequins, styrofoam, instant papier mache, craft feathers and paper flowers, together with countless how-to-do-it books.

Not is this all, for Kae and Carole are ready and willing to teach anybody to make the handicraft item of their choice. And what is more, this instruction is all free. There is an atmosphere of friendliness about the place, and people come in and work at their hobbies in the store as and when they wish. Carole tells me, however, that starting this fall, they do intend to run Friday evening classes in ceramics.

One can easily understand why resin craft is the main concern of the store when one sees the beautiful colors that go into the making of each lampshade.

The cost of these shades varies quite considerably depending on the type of frame used, and also on whether the hobbyists use pre-cast resin diamonds, or cast their own. To make such a lampshade, Carole tells me, usually takes between five to eight seasons.

These lampshades need both liquid resin and a catalyst before they can appear in their full, completed glory. Two parts to make a perfect whole. And so it is with this blossoming partnership. Kae Massey and Carole Todd together make the perfect handicraft team.

held as a material witness, for the reason the slug extracted from the body was from a Colt .38.

And Fernando had a Colt .38. At least he did have, but now it wasn't around. Then he remembered he lent it to someone, and the someone had lent it to someone else. In the shuffle they never did get the gun.

So far as Curly Guy was concerned, he made no bones about hating Wanderwell's guts, but vowed he had no hand in the killing.

He was charged with Wanderwell's murder, and newsmen at the trial were slightly mystified to notice that he and Mrs. Wanderwell seemed to be on very good terms. Each time there was a slight adjournment, she would go over and smilingly chat with him.

Wanderwell was buried at sea, from the deck of the Carmo. Fifteen miles off the California coast his body was consigned to the deep. James Farris, the Carmo's second officer, reading the burial service in a roaring gale. Huddled below were the seafaring adventurers, plus a couple of San Diego detectives. Their Chief, I think, had an idea that the burial service might be the excuse for the whole bunch to head for Samson!

So far as I remember Curly Guy won his freedom, which left the famous yacht murder a mystery to this day.

It was after the court hearing that Lord Montagu turned up in France. Some say he tried to join the French Foreign Legion and got turned down.

Others say he did join, but when he started selling articles about life in the Legion, they kicked him out.

After that he turned up in England, running a snack bar at Makenhead. This apparently proved a bit tame, and the next thing we heard he was back in Canada. In Montreal, to be exact, where he had a little trouble with the police over a $400 hotel bill.

Backgrounding these adventures, was his chequered matrimonial career. After his second divorce, he married Martha Matthews. Helen Brown. When she died, four years later, he next went to the altar with the Baroness Cora Kellie, a well-known portrait painter.

What happened to her is uncertain, but we know that in September, 1953, Fernando middle-aged it for the fifth time with a Miss Roberta Joughlin of Los Angeles.

This was the briefest of all, for eight months later came word from some obscure village in the hinterland of Mexico that Edward Eugene Fernando Montagu was dead. At 48, said the report, he had died of heartstroke while searching for some long hidden Aztec temple.

It was W. S. Gilbert who penned the lines (in the Yeoman of the Guard):

Is life a boom?
If so, it must befall
That Death, whenever he call
Must call too soon.

They apply in curious style, to Fernando, whose father — if you remember — was Captain of the Yeoman of the Guard.

ates) near us. They were always getting sick of having their houses fall down and the local people would have to look after them. The kids had a sense of humor and the local people loved them. It was the first time they had seen a white man who wasn't a big Sahib and probably arrogant as hell.

The incident may seem to illustrate development in reverse. However, it is a great error to think that people will love you because you can do everything better than they can. Nice guys have the good sense to finish last occasionally.

Another example of the non-sublim aspect of the volunteer came when I was talking an English lady, resident in India, about third class trains.

"Oh dear," she chuckled, "you don't travel third class, do you?"

"Usually."

"Oh my, you're not like the old sahibs. They would never have done that."

The classic sign in front of the colonial club — DOGS AND INDIANS NOT ALLOWED — was no joke; it existed. Orientalism was invariably accompanied by racism, and in former imperial possessions, the volunteer — by being fallible and friendly — does something to modify popular feeling against a white skin.

Of course, the aim of the volunteer programs is to become unnecessary, to hasten the day when developing countries produce all the BAs and chicken farmers they need.

In the meantime, however, the volunteer movement — bourgeois, middle class and Uncle

GREAT VOLUNTEER CAPER

Charlie-ism though it may be — is as much a part of the Sixties and the era of "concern" and "movement" as the Hippies, the New Left and the Student Revolt.

Perhaps its historical importance will not be as great. It will probably never be more than a footnote in any social history of the Sixties. However, it will have to its credit some concrete developmental achievements. It will have provided a few hundred thousand westerners with a new perspective on their own turbulent society. And it will have provided a good many stories for children and grandchildren on rainy winter evenings — stories perhaps a little more in tune with reality, though no less entertaining, than With Clive in India or Memories of the Matney.

NATURE'S NOTEBOOK

LIKE IT LIGHT

Many land mammals and birds depend on forests for cover, for a place to escape their enemies and a place in which to seek shelter from deep snow and stormy winters. Most of our wild-life prefers to live along the edges of forest stands rather than deep within the heavy forest itself. It is really on the edge of the forest, where this adjoins open areas or clearings made by man, that the greatest variety of animals and birds is to be found. Birds and animals are like people in that they prefer to live where they can enjoy the sun's warmth and where there is a variety of the requirements for life, such as food and cover close at hand. Deep within heavy conifer forests there is really not much variety in so far as permanent places to live are concerned.

MUSHROOMS LIVE ON WOOD DIET

Mushrooms and toadstools seen in the woods are the fruit of fungi produced by rotting wood-fibre. The fungi transforms the wood into useful soil. Many fungi are associated with the roots of trees, dissolving mineral products for the tree's nourishment and, in return, obtaining plant foods supplied by the green leaves of the trees.

Official Biography Proves Great Disappointment

McNAUGHTON—Without the Warts

Reviewed by
E. D. WARD-HARRIS

General Andrew McNaughton must be numbered among the handful of truly great men that this country has produced. Possessor of that almost unique combination, the man of vision and the man of decision, McNaughton—soldier, scientist, inventor and statesman—successfully packed more than a dozen lives into one whilst serving Canada for more than half a century.

McNaughton, who obviously despised and shunned all forms of self-advertisement, would have "nothing to do with the memoirs business." In 1964, two years before his death at 80, he suddenly reversed his decision and authorized John Swettenham, author of To Hesse the Victory, to write his definitive biography.

"Andy" McNaughton, averse as he was to publicity, had the knack of exciting public controversy. He thrived on opposition and his reputation suffered in consequence, and public appreciation of his achievements tended to diminish as he grew older and the memory of them faded.

His lifelong habit of making no concessions to himself, and of answering criticism with reticence, is surely the chief reason why the very name of McNaughton's conveys so little to today's dissenting generation.

But the memory of this great patriot should never be allowed to fade and for this reason we must be grateful that he reticent and allowed his story to be told.

As a fervent admirer of McNaughton I would like to be able to say that this biography has been well worth waiting for; instead, I am compelled to express disappointment.

The foreword, preface and parts of the text of this first volume refer to events which appear in the final volume—to be published next year. This is maddening. Also, there are instances of sloppiness such as a line missing (page 78) and an index reference to Nazis on page 300 which proves to be inaccurate. These sort of things are unforgivable.

The author, faced with the enormous task of dealing with McNaughton's many-faceted career, confides that he thought it necessary to write a number of volumes, one for each major part of McNaughton's life, but that the publishers requested that he pack the whole into a couple of volumes. The author was absolutely right.

McNaughton was born in Monmon, Saskatchewan, where his parents had settled in 1885, the year of the Riel rebellion. The McNaughtons were an important family and a detailed account of their existence would have been historically fascinating.

Young Andrew spent his formative years in Saskatchewan before going to a private school in the East and later to McGill University to graduate in physics and engineering and then to lecture there until the outbreak of the First World War. These important 27 years have been sandwiched into a scant 28 pages.

The First World War made McNaughton. He ended up as commander of the Canadian Heavy Artillery, a brigadier-general at the age of 31. His inventive genius earned him the praise of Sir Arthur Currie, the Canadian commander, as "the best gunner in the world—not the British Empire—but the whole world."

McNaughton's story is set inevitably in the wider context of the story of the Canadian Corps, for his scientific approach to counter-battery gunnery played a vital, if not a decisive part in the Canadian victories at Vimy Ridge, Hill 70, Passchendaele and Valenciennes.

McNAUGHTON, VOLUME 1
(1887-1920), by John Swettenham; Ryerson; 270 pages; $10.

This period, which deserves a fat volume all to itself, has been condensed into a miserable 137 pages.

After the war, at Currie's request, McNaughton remained in the army and in 1920 was appointed chief of the general staff. In the interim, among other things, he invented the cathode ray direction finder—the direct forerunner of radar.

He secured Canada's place in civil aviation by founding Trans-Canada Airlines; represented Canada at several important Commonwealth conferences; established army administration work camps for the unemployed, and so on. In 1935 he became president of the National Research Council, where he remained until 1939.

He found time to do the calculations for "a proper dimension for a St. Lawrence Waterway" and it was on these calculations that the famous Seaway was built. He brought surveying methods up to date and was chiefly responsible for the mapping of the North.

All this and more he accomplished during the 20 between-war years. But all we get is virtually a synopsis for this momentous period has been squeezed into a mere 140 pages.

Although the publishers must accept responsibility for this unwarranted treatment, the author has also earned a few brickbats. The book is overlaid with footnotes, most of which are interesting enough to be in the text where they belong. Those who habitually skip footnotes are advised not to do so in this instance.

I'll forgive Swettenham his footnotes, for I feel certain he was merely trying to cram a bit more information into his allotted space. But I find it hard to forgive him for his general treatment of his subject.

McNaughton's puritanism, which at times narrowed his outlook almost to the petty dimension of that of his arch-enemy Alan Brooke, must surely have produced temperamental foibles, misjudgment of opponents, and even mistakes. Where are the warts? Why have they been concealed? To show a man's weaknesses often enhances his stature; it certainly rounds out the picture. In McNaughton no warts appear and the picture we get is one of infallibility.

McNaughton met Churchill once on the Western Front and was offended by what he chose to call "his vulgarity." From that moment, we read incredulously, McNaughton "felt an antipathy towards Churchill."

This was a showing of the puritanical streak with a vengeance. The book could have been improved by showing this and other character defects side by side with the more positive qualities of this truly prodigious man of vision.

Despite the disappointments in this first volume, the well illustrated book is destined to become a Canadian best-seller, simply because the McNaughton story, the story of a giant among men, is great enough to survive any treatment, for he was unique, a man for all seasons.

Let us hope that the second volume, which deals with McNaughton's role in the Second World War, his work with the UN Atomic Energy Commission and his momentous tussle with Premier Bennett on the Columbia River issue, will be better—not in content but in presentation.

All About the Beatles

Reviewed by KING LEE

Author Hunter Davies, in his book The Beatles, the Authorized Biography, attempts to chronicle without spectacularizing, as a group and individually, the life and lives of the Beatles and show the complete reversal of their lives from the beginning, when fame, fortune and recognition were their prime ambitions and the total lack of any religion was their norm, to now, when privacy and excellence in their work are their main concern and religion, seemingly, is the only thing that keeps them motivated.

The book, although crude in its language at times, launches into the lives of the Beatles, John, Paul, George, Stu Sutcliffe, who was to bring the aforementioned three together, and Ringo. It tells of John, Paul and George's backgrounds as infants and at school, where John and George weren't exactly model students.

Although successfully portraying the hard life of the lower-to-middle class Liverpudlian, the book somehow doesn't get across the workings of the British education system. It fails to relate the level system of England to the grade system in North America. However, the point is put across about the difficulties the Beatles had in school.

Quarry Bank High School is the scene in Liverpool where John Lennon becomes interested in "pop" music. Bill Haley and the Comets, on April 13 1954, came on the radio with Rock Around the Clock. Then in January of 1956, Lonnie Donegan sang Rock Island Line. Then the big thing that influenced all "pop" music happened in 1956 . . . Elvis Presley. John, in that year, got together with five other boys at school and formed The Quarrymen. Of the original six in The Quarrymen, only Paul and George eventually joined John. From the Quarrymen they changed to Johnny and the Moondogs, then to the Silver Beatles.

The Silver Beatles, now out down to The Beatles, still without Ringo Starr but with a good drummer named Peter Best who was well liked by the audience, travelled to Hamburg where the "beat-group" craze was picking up much more quickly than in Liverpool or London.

The Beatles marked time between Hamburg and Liverpool when Brian Epstein happened along. Epstein, managing the family record store in Liverpool, had seen the Beatles in his store a number of times before but was annoyed at them because all they did was come into his store and mess up the displays and leave without buying anything. One day, by accident, Epstein's life became entangled with the Beatles when a customer at the record shop asked for My Bonnie, a record made by the Beatles. Annoyed by his own lack of knowledge about this record, Epstein made special endeavors to get it for the customer.

So thorough was Brian Epstein that he went to the club where the Beatles were playing and was impressed, though not completely, with their magnetism as a group. The signing of the Beatles, the many months of work financial struggling by Brian Epstein make most interesting reading.

The only sad moment in the Beatles' history, apart from the deaths of Stu Sutcliffe in April, 1969, in Hamburg, and Brian Epstein in August, 1967, in London, came just before the Beatles became world famous, when John, Paul and George decided that Peter Best wasn't wanted in the group, which to this day Best still doesn't understand. Epstein was given the job of telling Peter. Some bad reaction from the Best followers came for a few weeks after the break. At this point enters Ringo Starr, who had been drumming for a rival group led by Rory Storm.

The rest is history but is well chronicled by author Davies.

The final part of the book is the most interesting. It deals with the Beatles of today, their friends and parents, their empire and their music. A well-written look into the philosophies of the four as human beings, their likes and their hang-ups. They talk freely about drugs, LSD and religion. The impression is left that the future is as unpredictable as the Beatles' past has been.

Thoroughly enjoyable reading, with a touch of sadness and the well-known humor of the group. The book tries very hard not to glorify the Beatles, but to tell it as it was, and is.

Salmon Conservation Urged

After garnering more than a few plaudits in Great Britain, Anthony Netboy's new book The Atlantic Salmon: A Vanishing Species? made its North American debut this month.

Netboy, an assistant professor of English at the Portland Centre for Continuing Education, is a frequent contributor to newspapers and periodicals, and his subject is often conservation. He had made a thorough investigation of the problem of diminishing numbers of salmon on both sides of the Atlantic.

and interviewed biologists and other fishery experts during the course of a 15,000-mile journey.

His research is amply reflected in The Atlantic Salmon, which is documented with tables, charts and photographs, and includes a complete bibliography on the subject.

"Professor Netboy is to be congratulated for his scholarly work," commented U.S. Secretary of the Interior Stuart Udall. "It will aid not only the professional conservationist, but also will interest and motivate all thinking readers. This book should help sound the alarm about the near demise of Atlantic salmon in our country, and will no doubt serve as a technical reference for fisheries workers around the world."

Philip Kingsland Crowe, a director of the World Wildlife Fund, sportsman, and ardent conservationist since retiring as ambassador to South Africa in 1962, lauded Netboy's book: "Not only does it make a strong case for the conservation of this great fish but it also leads one to intriguing vistas for future fishing."

Netboy's first book Salmon of the Pacific Northwest was published in 1958. He will resume work on a third volume, tentatively titled Mao and the Salmon upon his return from the British Isles, where he is presently conducting a literary and historical travel-study seminar.

Fleur's Flowers Look Like Best Seller

By MICHAEL BATEMAN
The London Sunday Times

LONDON — Fleur Cowles is emerging as quite a successful painter of animals, and a book called Tiger Flower written around her pictures looks like it could become a best-seller here.

To many people she has seemed to be too much the ultimate American hostess in London, popping up at every Anglo-American function there was. "I think I probably don't know anyone as a friend for any reason other than their responsiveness," she said to Elisabeth Wooley, explaining her distinguished collection of acquaintances. "I don't know what it means to have to know people."

Fleur Cowles is now 54. She has been editor of Look Magazine; she married its publisher. She ran her own Avant-Garde magazine, Flair, which ran for 13 issues. She represented President Eisenhower at Queen Elizabeth's coronation in 1953, and became the first woman to represent an American president in Britain. She's married to an Englishman.

Miss Cowles gives the impression of being beautifully looked-after. She doesn't use much make-up, only orange lipstick, and her hair is expensively cut. She wears dark glasses which are delicately matched off when she's making a point. She's a bit like a mature Holly Golightly.

She lives in the Albany — "You'd be surprised at the number of my friends who think London is Albany" — in a welter of paintings by poverty-stricken shepherds whom she discovered in the backwoods of Hungary.

She has a considerable staff both in London and in her house in Sussex, but won't say exactly how many servants she has. She phones for one of them when she wants to get a book off a high shelf, and she says they're happy and relaxed. "They know what's expected of them."

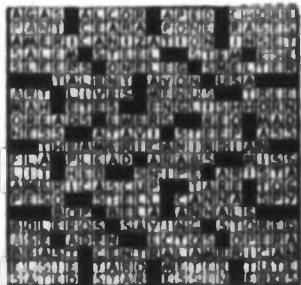

Her painting success has come gradually. She started 10 years ago. "I collected paintings for many years. And painters."

She invited an old friend, Dominic Gull, down to Sussex for a painting weekend, and he said her: "Stop copying and start creating."

Now she says the surrealist claim her as one of theirs.

Her Tiger Flowers look a bit too oddly to be surreal, but they're still tinged with the smell of Cowles success. Someone's already after the film rights.

Anyone meeting Miss Alice Carey for the first time and learning that she is an artist, would somehow expect her paintings to be gay, colorful and stimulating.

Conversely, anyone viewing her pictures and not having met their creator, would expect her to be gay, colorful and stimulating.

Both would be quite correct. She is. They are.

More than this, which is a natural reflection of personality, her work proves her a mature and extremely versatile painter, of many moods and much imagination. One or two of her brilliant former pieces are reminiscent of one of her favorite artists, Van Gogh. Some of her land- and water-scapes are bold and vivid with detail, others much more spare, restrained, and Oriental in flavor. Her portraits are warm and satisfying, and indicate, I thought, a personal liking for the sitter. Miss Carey is expert in many media, and quite obviously enjoys them all!

Sitting, talking with her in her bright little flat at 1042 Southgate, with her family treasures and dozens of pictures around her, her pet spaniel nearby, one has the feeling that she enjoys most things.

Particularly her career. By the time this reaches the press, Miss Carey will have returned to her position as instructor of art and the history of art at Mackinac College, Mackinac Island, Michigan.

This is a brand-new institution, just into its third year, whose work, especially its youth-training in leadership program, delights her. As does its geographical position, its historical connections, and its talented staff. On the Island and close to the college there is an ancient fort, occupied in turn, during other war-torn years, by both British and French. Graves of British officers are in the grounds. Ancient costumes of both officers and their ladies are on display in the fort, now a museum, and ferries carry vast numbers of tourists back and forth from the Island, which lies where the waters of Lakes Huron and Michigan join.

On the faculty are teachers from India, France, Scotland, England, and Germany, as well as three from Canada, and, of course, several Americans.

Miss Carey owes her own position to the fact that, having once taught art there during a short summer conference, she was promptly invited to become a permanent fixture. She instigated the current art course.

Actually, she is a native Albertan, where her father, an Irishman, out from the old country, farmed for some 10 years. Alice was one of six children. The family came to Victoria in 1910, and later on she attended Strathcona School for Girls, under its widely-known founder and headmistress, Miss 'Min' Gildea.

Graduated from there, she went to England to stay with an aunt. She was interested in drama, but those were the years which presented few opportunities for newcomers to that field, so she did a lot of other things. She studied physiotherapy. She put in a good deal of voluntary time with the Red Cross and the Girl Guides. She became interested in Moral Re-armament, went to a meeting in Switzerland, and while there was thrilled to be invited to the Geneva Conference. She was in London, engaged in various forms of war work, during the era of the draftee-bugs.

In addition to all the above, she had started painting, though evidently in a somewhat tentative way. A friend suggested she should take it up seriously, and study. So she signed up at Farnham, with a portrait painting class, and was, she said, "scared to death."

However, she had an understanding teacher, and she progressed. A more advanced course at the Wimbledon School of Art was hard work, but she was really beginning to find herself. A later course at St. Martin's, London, interested her more than ever, largely because of the varied models who came from many different parts of the world.

ALICE CAREY

ARTIST of MOODS

ARTIST ALICE CAREY . . . with painting and her Brigitte Bardot.

One very productive summer she went to France and to Spain with a friend, in her little Austin car. They had a marvelous time, especially in the south, where both girls fell in love with the Basques, an emotion apparently wholeheartedly reciprocated. Her description of a patio party, at which they were surrounded with their hosts' countless relatives and friends, none of whom could speak English, but all of whom danced and sang and encouraged their visitors do likewise, was quite hilarious.

"We couldn't speak much Spanish either," she recalled, laughing, "but we were good at gestures! Anyway, after a while someone came along who spoke French, so then we were well away!"

She painted and sketched all the way, and later showed much of her work in London.

Changes occurred. Her aunt died. Her mother, in Victoria, was not well. So finally Alice packed her pictures and her furniture, came to Victoria once more, and took a house on the Gorge. Here she soon was involved in work of all kinds. She remodelled part of the house, threw two rooms into one, and opened a studio, teaching painting both privately and for groups. She did a lot of stream gardening, including ditch-digging! Local Chinese artist Stephen Lowe became her pupil, and years later, she said, she became his! She has had several exhibitions, the Art Gallery has some of her work on its loan program and a number of her pictures are on the walls of Mackinac College.

When the college is closed she comes back to Victoria, where she still has brothers and sisters, one of whom during term time, takes care of Miss Brigitte Bardot.

Thus is the little elderly spaniel, for whom the Michigan winters would be much too cold. She is a fetching creature, this Brigitte, who has developed an irresistible method of attracting a spot of special attention. She likes her rear patted. So she backs up close to her chosen prospect, sinks front paws and head to ground level, and turning her head sideways to note these stage effects, presents an elevation to your hand which is nothing if not enticing.

Light has just dawned. Can these seductive contours be the reason she is named as she is? But no, on second thoughts, probably not. After all, she's as black as the inside of a cow under a bridge at midnight.
